Nodyn | Note

Family estate, situated in Selatyn near Oswestry, Shropshire, but incorporating large ancestral estates in North Wales.

The earliest settlement on the site is a motte, supposedly associated with Owain Brogyntyn. By the mid-sixteenth century the owner was John Lacon, whose estate included Constable's Hall at Porkington and Llanddyn near Llangollen in Denbighshire. His daughter, Margaret, was married in 1556 to William Maurice (1542-1622) of Clennau in Penyfed, Caernarfonshire, eldest son of Moris ap Eliza and Ellen Puleston. Since 1501, when Moris ap John ap Meredudd received a gift of land in Clennau from his foster-father, Rhys ap Ieuan ap Dicws Foel, the Moris family had accumulated property in Penyfed, Penmorfa, Trefan, Pennant, Clennau and parts of Merionethshire. William Maurice continued this trend over the next five decades by the further acquisition of lands in Shropshire, Denbighshire and Merionethshire, by leases from the Corporation of Harlech and enclosures in Harlech Marsh. He was widowed in 1572, but remarried twice, in 1576 to Ellen Lewis, widow of John Lewis of Chwaen Wen, Anglesey, and in 1605 to Jane Johnes (nee Puleston), widow of Sir Thomas Johnes of Abermarlais, Carmarthenshire. From 1581 he held several important public offices in the county administration of Caernarfonshire and Merionethshire, and he was knighted upon the accession of James I in 1603. -- Sir William's eldest son, William Wynn Maurice (1559-c.1598) had predeceased him, leaving two daughters, Ellen and Margaret, as coheiresses upon their grandfather's death in 1622. Ellen Maurice (1578-1626), was married to John Owen of Bodsilin and Fernhill, secretary to Sir Francis Walsingham, and eight children were born prior to his death in 1611. She remarried in 1616, to Sir Francis Eure, Chief Justice of North Wales, by whom she had one son, Compton. By then she was living at Constable's Hall, Porkington, where she had the house rebuilt in 1617. Ellen died in 1626, leaving her eldest son, John Owen (1600-1666), as heir to the Clennau estate, and his brother William (1607-1670), to inherit Porkington. -- Sir John, who was a staunch Royalist, served as Vice-Admiral of North Wales and Governor of Conway Castle. Col. William Owen defended Harlech Castle during the Civil War. Their sister, Margaret, was a forbear by marriage of the Godolphin family of Abertanat. -- John Owen's son, William (1624-1677/8) married Catherine, daughter of Lewis Anwyl of Parc, Llanfrothen in 1648. He inherited both Clennau and Porkington from his father and his uncle respectively, but he based his family home at Llanddyn. The surviving heir of William and Catherine Owen was their son, Robert (1658-1698). He was knighted in 1678, served as MP for Merionethshire and Caernarfon Borough, and held several other local public offices. In 1683 he married Margaret, daughter of Owen Wynn and heiress to the substantial estates of Glyn, Sylfaen and Ystumcegid. A short time later he also acquired a moiety of Nant in Flintshire by a settlement with his wife's family. Unfortunately, Sir Robert Owen died prematurely in 1698, leaving massive debts. -- The successor to the estate was William Owen (1688-1767), who eased his financial burden by marrying Mary, daughter of Dr Henry Godolphin, Dean of St Paul's and Provost of Eton, in 1730. William Owen's estate was additionally enlarged by the purchase in 1736 of part of the Brynker lands in Dolbenmaen, which he promptly mortgaged to pay for extensive renovations at Porkington. -- The Brogyntyn estate descended to the eldest surviving son, Robert Godolphin Owen (1733-1792), who remained a bachelor. In the absence of male heirs the estate was inherited by his sister Margaret (1738-1806), who married Owen Ormsby of Willowbrook, co. Sligo, 1777. Their daughter, Mary Jane (1781-1869), became heiress to Brogyntyn, Clennau, Glyn and her father's lands in Ireland. Her wealth enabled her to carry out a complete renovation of Porkington. In 1815 she married William Gore, another Irish landowner, who assumed the additional family name of Ormsby. Considerable additions were made to the estate during his lifetime, the largest being Drenowydd in Whittington, purchased from the Peniarth estate in 1830 for £35,000. A fire caused major damage to parts of Brogyntyn Hall in 1874. -- The title Baron Harlech was first awarded to John Ralph Ormsby-Gore (1816-1876) in 1875 shortly before his death. He was succeeded under a special remainder by his younger brother, William Richard Ormsby-Gore (1819-1904), second Baron Harlech. The latter had followed a military career and held several public offices in Ireland between 1841 and 1876. He married in 1850 to Emily Charlotte, daughter of Admiral Sir George Francis Seymour. By 1883 his estates comprised 57,647 acres in North Wales, Shropshire, Berkshire and Ireland, and they were further increased by the purchase of Pentre-pant near Brogyntyn in 1893. -- George Ralph Charles Ormsby-Gore, third Baron Harlech (1855-1938), followed a distinguished military and public career which included a command of the Welsh Guards and he made a prestigious marriage in 1881 to Lady Margaret Ethel Gordon, daughter of Charles, Marquis of Huntley. Their son succeeded to a depleted estate, for in 1894 the trustees were permitted to sell land in Treflys and in 1911 all the Eifionydd property (over 8000 acres) was sold, except the family's ancestral home at Clenennau. -- William George Arthur Ormsby-Gore, fourth Baron Harlech (1885-1964), saw active service in Egypt during the First World War and he held numerous public offices including Lord Lieutenant of Merionethshire, Constable of Harlech and Caernarfon castles, board member of several national museums and galleries, and High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in South Africa. In 1913 he married Lady Beatrice Cecil, by whom he had six children. -- William David Ormsby-Gore, the fifth Baron (1918-1985) joined the army in 1939 and after the Second World War he pursued a career in politics. He was also closely involved with the media, being a film censor and chairman of Harlech television. He married twice, in 1940 to Sylvia Lloyd Thomas, and again in 1969 to Pamela Colin of New York. David Ormsby-Gore was killed in a road accident in 1985. The eldest surviving son of his first marriage, the current Lord Harlech, is Francis David Ormsby-Gore, born in 1954. -- The effects of two world wars and the burden of death duties led to the sale of Drenowydd in 1939, Llanddyn in 1943 and the eventual abandonment of Brogyntyn. From around 1985 the house stood virtually empty and it was finally sold to developers in 2005.

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content

Records of the Brogyntyn estate, home of the Ormsby-Gore family, Barons Harlech, 1296-1951. They include estate papers and deeds, legal papers, financial papers, family papers and county administration papers of the Ormsby-Gore family, their ancestors, the Maurices and the Owens of Clenennau, the Wynns of Glyn and others, such as Anwyl of Park, Clayton of Lea Hall, Godolphin of Abertanat, Lyster of Penrhos, Mostyn of Nant, and Vaughan of Corsygedol. The three main estates represented in the collection are Brogyntyn, Clenennau and Glyn, the latter constituting a major addition to the existing North Wales holdings of Sir Robert Owen upon his marriage to Margaret Wynn in 1683. The documentation also covers other, subsidiary estates acquired by marriage or inheritance, namely Llanddyn, Sylfaen, Ystumcegid, Nant, Cemais, Penrhos, Abertanat and properties in the west of Ireland. The record types include title deeds for lands in Caernarfonshire, Merionethshire, Flintshire, Denbighshire, Montgomeryshire, Shropshire, elsewhere in England and Wales, and in the Irish counties of Westmeath, Leitrim, Sligo, Mayo and Roscommon, 1296-1838; rentals, accounts and other papers associated with estate administration, [1380s]-1951; manorial records, 1429-1804; household management papers, 1662-[c. 1949]; legal and arbitration papers, 1410-1834; financial papers such as mortgages and accounts, 1492-1876; family settlements, probate records and trusts, 1485-[c. 1862]; private letters, 1582-1950; papers relating to family interests, [14th cent.]-1951; personal papers of family members, 1672-1945; royal appointments and honours, 1795-1948; central government papers, 1581-1887; county administration papers, 1518-1904; and administration records of the church, schools and charities, 1598-[1876x1904]. Other component parts of the archive are the Clennau Letters and Papers, which combine personal correspondence with the civil and military administration of Caernarfonshire from the late sixteenth to late seventeenth centuries. Additional records, comprising Lord Harlech's Game Books (3 volumes), 1882-1933, a journal kept by W. R. Ormsby Gore of the 13th Light Dragoons, May-September 1854, two manuscript catalogues of plays, 1815, and a manuscript catalogue of the library at Porkington, 1809, were acquired in March 2017.

The Brogyntyn (Longueville) group comprises deeds and documents relating to the Brogyntyn estate, 1607-1977, deposited by Longueville Gittins solicitors who provided professional legal services to the estate.

The rentals and accounts appear to be remarkably unsystematic; some of them cover single estates, while others deal with several estates together. The lack of consistency has influenced the cataloguer's decision to list the administrative records in groups of estates, rather than individually, to avoid an excess of cross-references.

Records deriving from administration of the Clennau, Glyn, Sylfaen and Ystumcegid estates in Caernarfonshire and Merionethshire, 1530-1902. The lands belonging to Clennau were situated in Penmorfa, Gest, Llanfihangel-y-pennant, Beddgelert, Llanystumdwy, Caernarfon town, Pwllheli, Treflys and Ynyscynhaearn, Caernarfonshire, and in Llanfair[-juxta-Harlech], Llanenddwyn, Llanfihangel-y-traethau, Penrhyn, Ffestiniog, Penllyn, Llanfrothen and Nanmor, Merionethshire. The Glyn and Sylfaen estates lay in Talsarnau, Llanfihangel-y-traethau, Llandanwg, Llandecwyn and Llanaber; and Ystumcegid in Llanfihangel[-y-pennant], Llanystumdwy, Penmorfa, Cricieth, Clynnog and Penyfed. The records from each estate are similar, comprising rentals and related papers, [1535]-1849, accounts, 1534-1827, leases, 1530-1842, correspondence, 1609-1888, and miscellaneous estate administration papers, 1662-1902. It is interesting to note the relationships of the Owen family with the eighteenth century estate stewards, notably Anne Jones of Clennau, Griffith Parry, John Parry of Brynbanon and Humphrey Owen of Lasynys.

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Rentals of the Clennau, Glyn, Sylfaen and Ystumcegid estates, [1535x1572]-1849. They cover Eifionydd [1535x1572] and Clennau, 1551-1689, combined with Brogyntyn, Llanddyn and lands in Anglesey from 1589 to 1606; Glyn, 1623; Ystumcegid, 1692-1723; and Clennau, Glyn, Sylfaen and Ystumcegid, 1690-1849. Gest disappears from the rentals by 1678, which is consistent with Sir Robert Owen's loss of the township to William Price of Rhiwlas. Sir Robert married Margaret Wynn in 1683, but Glyn and Sylfaen in Merionethshire do not appear as joint property until 1690. Some of the Clennau and Glyn properties appear collectively as the Merionethshire estates from 1727. Likewise by 1749 some of the other Caernarfonshire properties are not distinguished separately from Ystumcegid. From 1779 to 1804, the individual properties are not identified, but the tenants' names are listed under the vague headings of 'Caernarfonshire estate' or the Merionethshire estate'. The purchased property of Dolbenmaen is incorporated from 1742 and part of the Shropshire and Denbighshire estates are included in 1773. Additions in the form of allotments and encroachments are in evidence from 1832. Several of the rentals incorporate accounts of arrears and repairs to property.

Cyfres | Series EAA2. vtls004449199: Clenennau, Glyn, Sylfaen and Ystumcegid estate accounts,Dyddiad | Date: 1534-1827. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Account books, loose accounts and receipts deriving from administration of the estates of Clenennau, Glyn, Sylfaen and Ystumcegid, 1534-1827. They typically show the income from rents and usual outgoings for tithes, taxes, other dues and charity payments; occasional rentals; profits from estate produce; disbursements for repair and maintenance of the farm houses, outbuildings and mills, especially Singrig Mill; purchase and carriage of commodities; keeping livestock; employees' wages; and agent's travelling expenses and subsistence. The accounts for some years, notably the loose accounts of 1705-1711 and the account book of 1725-1750, exhibit a systematic arrangement by type and still bear the original numbers.

Cyfres | Series EAC1. vtls004455746: Brogyntyn and Llanddyn rentals,

Dyddiad | Date: 1646-1849. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Rentals mainly for the Shropshire estate of Brogyntyn and the Llanddyn estate in Llangollen, Denbighshire, 1646-1849. They also sporadically include the Owen family's lands in Merionethshire and the Clennau estate in Caernarfonshire, 1657-1696, 1768-1773. A substantial gap exists in the Brogyntyn (Porkington) and Llanddyn rentals between 1720 and 1762. From 1792 the rentals exist as separate units for each half year and they become more regular in format, to include columns of arrears and land tax payments. At the same date the name of Ellen Owen, Robert Godolphin's remaining unmarried sister, appears as joint owner with that of her brother-in-law, Owen Ormsby. From Michaelmas 1797, the rentals include property in Broniarth and Llandysilio, Montgomeryshire. The purchased estates of Oerley Hall and Drenwydd are included from 1827 and 1832 respectively. Several rentals include accounts of arrears and expenditure on labour and repairs.

Cyfres | Series EAE1. vtls004458883: Abertanat, Penrhos and Cemais rentals,

Dyddiad | Date: 1711- [c. 1949] (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Rentals and related papers for the of the Abertanat estate, 1711-1803, [c. 1949]; the Cemais estate, between 1747 and 1824; the Penrhos estate, 1824-1833; and the three combined Montgomeryshire estates, 1803-1846. The portions of the Abertanat estate lying in Llanyblodwel, Oswestry, Llanymynech and Llansanffraid-ym-Mechain do not feature in rentals later than 1746, and in 1766 they passed to another branch of the family under the terms of Margaret Godolphin's will. The remaining part of the estate, lying in Montgomeryshire, was called Broniarth. The Abertanat (Broniarth) rentals exhibit a regularity of format, with separate columns for arrears, land tax and expenses for repairs. The Cemais rentals show that John Owen was already in possession by 1786. By the time of the 1801 rental he also owned the Montgomeryshire portion of Abertanat in Broniarth, inherited from his cousin, Robert Godolphin Owen (died 1792).

Dyddiad | Date: 1741-1815. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Tenancy papers, comprising mainly leases on the Abertanat (Broniarth), Cemais and Penrhos estates in Cemais and Darowen, 1785-1796, Guilsfield, 1768-1802, Llandrinio and Llansanffraid-ym-mechain, 1776-1815, Llandysilio, 1741-1798, Meifod, 1782-1811, St Martin's, 1787, and miscellaneous Montgomeryshire parishes, [c. 1766]-1811, and a separate bundle of notices to quit tenancies, 1793. Many of the leases and agreements stipulate the reservation to John Owen of minerals, hunting, tree plantation and timber for charcoal, the preservation of game and keeping of game dogs. Some of the documents refer to parcels of old common land in Deuddwr, allotted to John Owen as a result of enclosures and subsequently leased to tenant farmers.

Dyddiad | Date: [16]66-1859. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters to [Col. William Owen?], [16]66, Sydney Godolphin, 1700-1728, Margaret Godolphin, 1717-1759, Arthur and William Owen, 1739, 1754, Mary Owen, 1776-1783, John Owen of Penrhos, 1789-1814, Owen Ormsby, 1794, and William Ormsby-Gore, 1842-1859, from tenants, solicitors and the agents of the Abertanat, Cemais and Penrhos estates, accompanied by occasional replies and relevant letters from third parties. The subject matter comprises mostly routine estate business, such as rent collection, leasing of properties, chief rents, taxes, tithes, submission of accounts, family and local news, problems encountered by agents and tenants, enclosures and encroachments on common land, particularly in Deuddwr and Broniarth, sale of crops and livestock, a sitting place in Llanymynech church, 1759, exploitation of timber and property repairs. Items of interest include fishing rights in Broniarth Pool, 1725-1728; Margaret Godolphin's intention to divert the River Tanat and a mill stream, 1733, 1737; the manorial courts of Cyfeiliog, 1754; consultation of the 1655 sessions rolls at Powis Castle in connection with property of John Owen at Broniarth, 1796; disputes over a sheepwalk on the Cemais estate of John Owen, 1806-1813; subscriptions to a new road from Meifod, 1807; and proposals for a railway near the Cemais estate, 1859. Some letters contain integral accounts.

Sub-sub-sub-fonds EAF. vtls004461122: Irish estate administration papers,

Dyddiad | Date: 1775-1887. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Records deriving from administration of the estates of William Gore, Owen Ormsby, Mary Jane and William Ormsby-Gore in the counties of Westmeath, Leitrim, Sligo, Mayo and Roscommon. They comprise rentals, 1775-1858, accounts, 1789-1859, and correspondence, 1793-1887; and they constitute a good source of information on the impoverished state of Irish agriculture, land reclamation through drainage, other attempted improvements and the effects of the Potato Famine.

Cyfres | Series EAF1. vtls004461527: Irish estates, rentals and related papers,

Dyddiad | Date: 1775-1858. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Rentals for the lands of William Gore, 1775-1829, Owen Ormsby, 1781-1809, Mary Jane Ormsby, 1812-1854, and William Ormsby-Gore, 1815-1858, in the counties of Westmeath, Leitrim, Sligo, Mayo and Roscommon. The Westmeath and Leitrim estates are not listed after 1776. The rentals after 1789 are mainly in printed format. The lands of Mary Jane Ormsby-Gore are listed separately from her husband's Irish estates, but they appear to have been managed by the same agent, with the rentals organised on an annual basis from May 1st. Between 1846 and 1850 the crisis of the Irish Potato Famine is evident from the allowances made to some tenants for losses of animals and crops, and ejection of numerous others from their holdings, with considerable loss of rent arrears to the landowners.

Cyfres | Series EAF3. vtls004461827: Irish estate correspondence,

Dyddiad | Date: 1793-1887. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters to Roger Parke, agent to the Ormsbys, 1793, William Gore, 1797-1805, Mary Jane Ormsby-Gore, 1819-[c. 1851], William Ormsby-Gore, 1824-1859, and William Richard Ormsby-Gore, 1850-1887, from agents, tenants and other individuals, accompanied by occasional replies and relevant letters from third parties. They mainly concern routine estate business such as rent collection and leases, but they also discuss the poverty and ejection of tenants, complaints against a bailiff, repairs to Willowbrook House, 1850, fishing rights and agricultural practices. Letters to William Ormsby-Gore describe a proposed road construction through an estate at Letterbrone, county Sligo, 1824; political unrest among protestants, 1828; a request by a minister for stone to build a school at Carigallen, Leitrim, 1842; aims of the Society for Draining and Cultivating Irish Bogs, 1843; conditions during the Potato Famine, 1847; a civil bill affecting landlords' rights to eject tenants; and the processing of flax, 1851. Other items include detailed reports of farm work and wages paid to labourers on the estates of William Richard Ormsby-Gore in Dromod, Leitrim, 1875, 1878; and a circular analysing eviction returns for the Irish counties, 1886.

(dyddiad creu) (date of creation) Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: Title deeds of properties acquired through purchase, lease, mortgage, marriage and inheritance by members of the Conway and Mostyn families of Nant, [mid-14 cent.], 1367-[c. 1686], mainly in the parishes of Cwm, Llanasa, Meliden and Rhiwlyfnwyd, but also in Bodfari, Gwaunysgor, Cilcain, Rhuddlan and Whitford. The earliest title deeds include a small number of fourteenth century documents involving the de Crevecoeur family, lords of Prestatyn. Further items of significance are conveyances of lands in Cwm and Diserth from 1533 to 1625 by the Lloyds of Hiraddug, who had established a marital connection to the Mostyn family. Other deeds show the acquisition of land by the Conway family, mainly in Llanasa and Meliden, between 1539 and 1624. Family settlements and associated documents of the Mostyn family, dating from 1625 to 1659, relate to lands mainly in Meliden, but also in Llanasa, Cilcain, Cwm and Whitford. Other families represented in the deeds include Holland of Prestatyn, and Prestland of Prestatyn and Wardle, Cheshire.

Crëwr | Creator: Lacon family.

Dyddiad | Date: 1296-1838. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds of houses and lands belonging to Brogyntyn and to the purchased estates of Drenewydd, Oerley Hall and Pentre-pant, situated in the parishes of Alberbury, Baschurch, Ellesmere, Loppington and Llansilin, 1296-1727; Oswestry, 1397-1838; St Martin's, 1582-1672; Selatyn, 1479-1834; West Felton and Whittington, 1527-1767, and miscellaneous parishes, 1571-1830. The property interests of the Lacon family in Shropshire are represented in the early Brogyntyn deeds up to 1623.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The provenance of all the Brogyntyn title deeds cannot be stated with certainty. It is likely that, despite attempts at rational classification, the group contains undetected stray documents deriving from the Shropshire portion of Abertanat, and deeds from the purchased estates of Oerley Hall, Pentre-pant and Drenewydd.

Cyfres | Series ETG2. vtls004492603: Oswestry deeds,

Crëwr | Creator: Dryhurst family, of Oswestry.

Dyddiad | Date: 1397-1838. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds of properties in the town and parish of Oswestry, 1397-1838. A number of properties in and around the town were owned by Richard Dryhurst and his son, Edward, prior to their purchase by William Owen in 1636-1639. Other premises were purchased by William Owen, 1660-1661, Sir Robert Owen, 1688-1689, and William Ormsby-Gore, 1835-1838. Detailed boundary clauses in many of the deeds provide useful information about the urban development of Oswestry from the late Mediaeval period onwards.

Dyddiad | Date: 1527-1830. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds relating to properties in the parishes of West Felton, 1624-1767, Whittington, 1527-1725, and miscellaneous Shropshire parishes, 1571-1830. Some of the deeds illustrate the development of the agricultural landscape by the division of ancient, open fields into smaller, enclosed plots during the seventeenth century. The file of miscellaneous deeds contains documents which relate to the purchased estates of Pentre-pant and Drenwydd.

Crëwr | Creator:

Dyddiad | Date: 1476-1828. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds of properties belonging to the estates of Abertanat in Montgomeryshire, Shropshire and Denbighshire, 1476-1765, Cemais, Montgomeryshire, 1545-1690, and Penrhos, Montgomeryshire and Shropshire, 1508-1828. Some of the sixteenth and seventeenth century Montgomeryshire deeds clearly illustrate the development of the modern rural landscape; they record the acquisition by single landowners of mediaeval field strips previously in multiple ownership.

Cyfres | Series ETK1. vtls004495902: Abertanat title deeds,

Crëwr | Creator: Abertanat Estate (England and Wales)

Dyddiad | Date: 1476-[1792]. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds of properties belonging to the Abertanat estate of the Tanat and Godolphin families, lying in the township and manor of Broniarth in Guilsfield, 1476-[1792], also in the parishes of Llandysilio, 1552-1736, Llanfechain and Meifod, 1640, 1722, Llangedwyn and Llansanffraid in Denbighshire and Montgomeryshire, 1690, 1749, Llanyblodwel and Llanymynech, 1535-1746, St Martin's and Whittington in Shropshire, 1527-1765. The documents relating to Broniarth show clearly how land was acquired and transferred under the manorial system. Some of the late sixteenth century Montgomeryshire deeds illustrate the acquisition by the Tanats and others of strips of land within larger named fields previously in multiple ownership under the mediaeval agricultural system. A large file of Shropshire deeds relates to the Moreton Hall (renamed Margaret Hall) estate in Weston Rhyn, Ifton and Daywell, purchased by Margaret Godolphin between 1760 and 1763.

Cyfres | Series ETK3. vtls004496647: Penrhos title deeds,

Crëwr | Creator: Penrhos Estate (Montgomeryshire, Wales)

Dyddiad | Date: 1508-1828. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds of lands acquired through purchase, marriage, mortgage and lease by the families of Derwas of Penthryn Fechan, Penrhos and Llwyn y Mapsis, Penryn of Domgae and Llandrinio, Lyster and Owen of Penrhos, and Ormsby-Gore of Brogyntyn, situated for the most part in Haughton, Llandrinio and Llandysilio, 1508-1827. Other locations include the parishes of Castell Caereinion and Welshpool, 1585-1728, Guilsfield, 1573-1826, Llanfechain and Llansanffraid Deuddwr, 1592-1794, in Montgomeryshire, Llanymynech on the Shropshire border, 1672, and miscellaneous parishes, 1541-1828. The effects of the enclosure of common land are apparent in some deeds of the late sixteenth to late eighteenth centuries. Other documents illustrate the acquisition by single landowners, such as the Penryn family, of mediaeval field strips previously in multiple ownership. During the first half of the eighteenth century the Penrhos estate was consolidated and enlarged by Elizabeth Lyster and by her daughter, Elizabeth Lyster (married name Owen). William Ormsby-Gore increased the estate still further with the purchase of a farm in Guilsfield, 1826.

Is-fonds | Subfonds L. vtls004444424: Arbitration and legal papers,

Dyddiad | Date: 1410-1834. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Arbitration and legal papers of the families of Maurice of Clennau, Owen and Ormsby-Gore of Brogyntyn, Wynn of Glyn and others, 1410-1834. The arbitration awards are usually the result of disputes over boundaries or title which did not proceed to court, [c. 1429]-1822, and the legal papers derive from court cases, mostly equity proceedings over property, title or inheritance of estates in Wales and Shropshire, 1410-1834. Documents prior to the beginning of the eighteenth century contain a substantial proportion of Latin.

Cyfres | Series L2. vtls004499725: Legal papers,

Crëwr | Creator: Maurice, William, Sir, 1542-1622.

Dyddiad | Date: 1410-1834. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Legal papers, 1410-1834, which include writs, bills of complaint, defendants' answers, breviates, court orders, cases with opinions of counsel, affidavits, interrogatories and depositions of witnesses, jury lists, copies and abstracts of deeds, lawyers' accounts, pedigrees to prove title and notes on legal procedure.

A large part of the records comprises disputes over title to land, inheritance or debt in North Wales and Shropshire, which took place in the High Court of Chancery, the Court of the Exchequer, the Court of King 's Bench or the Council in the Marches of Wales, or which were treated as equity cases in the Court of Great Sessions. The most substantial of them concern Sir William Maurice 's quarrels with the Ellis family of Ystumlllyn over the title to lands in Gest, [c.1597]-1620; his financial disputes with his step-son, Sir Henry Johnes of Abermarlais, 1611-1620; and Sir Robert Owen 's disputes with Col. William Price of Rhiwlas over the title to lands in Rhedynogfelen and Gest, 1679-1694. A number of the cases provide information about the distribution of both freehold properties and leasehold crown lands in Eifionydd, Caernarfonshire, during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Several other files contain papers relating to the Flintshire estates of the Conway family of Nant, dated from around 1540 to 1633; boundary disputes and trespasses in Merionethshire, 1587-1749; property of the Wynn family of Glyn, 1587-1686; the indebted estate of Sir Robert Owen, 1698-1705; and the illicit activities of William Owen 's agents on the Caernarfonshire and Merionethshire estates, 1733-1754.

	Ellis, Owen, d. 1622. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Papers relating to disputes between Sir William Maurice and the Ellis family of Ystumlllyn, [c. 1597]-1620. Sir William Maurice owned several freehold properties and held a crown lease in the township of Gest, Caernarfonshire. The lawsuits are centred mainly around his repeated attempts to disprove the title of Owen Ellis to certain lands in Gest. The papers, deriving from several actions in the courts of Chancery, the Exchequer, the Council of the Marches in Wales and Star Chamber, include substantial bills of complaint: Owen Ellis, plt., against Sir William Maurice and other members of his family and neighbours, debts, for unlawful possession of properties at Porth Hirfaen and Gest, and forcible entry with damage at Bron-y-gadair and Ynyscynhaearn, 1617-1620; the counter suit of Sir William Maurice, plt., and further complaints against Owen Ellis and others, debts, for intrusion into Bron-y-gadair Bach, Cwm Allt y Minog, etc., and for libellous accusations of bribery, corruption, sorcery and maintaining houses of ill-repute, 1617-1620. Accompanying papers include defendants' answers, breviate, jury lists, interrogatories, depositions of witnesses, court orders, a copy of a deed of exchange of 1585 and pleadings from a suit by the executors of Ellis ap Cadwalader, claiming a penalty against William Maurice for breaking the terms of the exchange, [c. 1597]. Owen Ellis's complaint and the brief of 1617 contain detailed descriptions of the land boundaries in question. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Title based on contents. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: First date estimated from content. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: L2/21. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Papers deriving from equity suits brought by John Owen of Clennau, plt. against his brother, William Owen and other members of the family, defts, [1627x1630] for attempting to deprive him of his title to Porkington, Llanddyn, crown leases of Rhedynogfelen and Gest and £950 annuities due to him under the terms of a £5000 bond undertaken by his mother, Ellen Owen (later Eure), all of which he claimed as heir to the Brogyntyn estate. The bills of complaint specify unlawful retention of title deeds and the bond by the defts, appropriation and defacement of personal goods once belonging to Sir William Maurice and to the plt. 's father, John Owen; and the denial of Margaret Bynkir that she ever made assurances to relinquish her rights in the estate. A lawyer 's opinion describes the position of Compton Eure with regard to the lease on Gest, left to him as a legacy for two years under his mother 's will. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Title based on contents. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Dated from content. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: L2/46. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

L2/74. vtls004501830	File - Dispute over title to lands in Rhedynogfelen and Gest,	1679-1694.	95 items
	Crëwr / Creator: Price, William, 1619-1691.

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Papers deriving from a dispute between Sir Robert Owen and Col. William Price of Rhiwlas, which began in 1679 at the expiry of the last crown lease on the townships of Rhedynogfelen and Gest. In 1679 Col. Price inherited Rhedynogfelen and Gest under the will of his uncle, Charles Jones, who had purchased the former crown lands in 1632. The disagreements concerned several properties which Sir Robert Owen maintained were his freehold estate, but which Col. Price considered to be part of his own inheritance. The file contains papers in a suit brought in the Court of Great Sessions for Caernarfonshire by Col. Price and his tenant, Robert Ellis, against Anne Jones of Clennau and Sir Robert Owen on a charge of trespass and ejectment in Ynyscynhaearn and Gest, 1680-1681. Further documents include William Price's subsequent bill of complaint to the Court of the Exchequer, 1682; defendants' answers; a detailed brief of suit [c. 1682]; memoranda of transactions and proposed agreements between the parties [c. 1682-1683]; particulars of the lands in question, 1683; interrogatories and depositions of witnesses, 1682, 1687-1688; an account of rent arrears, 1688; and correspondence relating to the case, 1680-1688. An arbitration award made by William Lloyd, Bishop of St Asaph and Humphrey Humphreys, Dean of Bangor in 1686 was deemed inadequate by counsel on both sides. Court orders, 1686-1687, show that a commission was appointed to clarify the boundaries between Gest, Ynyscynhaearn and the adjacent parishes, prior to a further arbitration in 1690 which acknowledged the right of Sir Robert Owen to certain freehold properties, while ensuring a fair allocation of the former crown lands to Col. Price. The matter was eventually concluded after the latter's death with a release by his daughters to Sir Robert Owen of all disagreements and further actions in 1694. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Title based on contents. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: L2/74. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Crëwr | Creator: Wynne, Edward, 1681-1755

Dyddiad | Date: [c. 1705]-1767, 1785. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters received by William Owen, [c. 1705]-1767, together with a number of copies or drafts of his replies. Some of the letters are from members of the Godolphin and Owen families, [c. 1705]-1758, and others are from solicitors, bankers, national figures and local gentry, including several from Edward Wynn(e) of Bodewryd. General topics include charitable bequests and legacies by Anne Jones of Clenennau, [c. 1705]-1716; William Owen 's role in local government; elections in Shropshire and North Wales, particularly corrupt practices in the Caernarfon Borough elections for 1713 and 1722; improvements to Brogyntyn (Porkington) Hall, 1734; the appointment of Dr Hutton as bishop of Bangor, 1743; the Jacobite Rebellion, 1745-1746; the purchase of Dolbenmaen, 1735; litigation relating to the estates of Richard Clayton and Arthur Owen, 1740-1760, boundary disputes in Gest and Penyfed, and quarrels with Margaret Lloyd of Cesail Gyfarch, 1741. The last file contains correspondence between William Owen, Edward Wynn(e), a Flemish lawyer and others, in an attempt to prove his claim to £500 out of the Bodysgallen estate, following the death of a distant kinsman John Francis Ouwens, 1710-1711, 1785.

Cyfres | Series PEC5. vtls004512116: Correspondence of Mary Owen of Brogyntyn,

Dyddiad | Date: 1728-1784. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters to Mary Owen (née Godolphin), wife of William Owen of Brogyntyn, 1730-1784, mainly from her immediate family, Godolphin and Owen relatives, friends and other close associates. They constitute a rich, lively source of information on the personal, domestic and social circumstances of an eighteenth century gentry family. Many of the letters reflect Mrs Owen 's own interests in music, theatre, literature, political news and high society gossip among her contemporaries. Recurrent topics include the ecclesiastical career of Lewis Owen; renovations at Porkington, 1735-1743; the estates of Richard Clayton and Arthur Owen; Elizabeth Longueville 's settlement; Jacobite disturbances; elections in North Wales and Shropshire; church preferments in England and Wales; and court life under the Hanoverian royal family, 1731-1752.

Cyfres | Series PEC8. vtls004514002: Correspondence of William Richard Ormsby-Gore,

Dyddiad | Date: 1833-1902. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters to William Richard Ormsby-Gore, second Lord Harlech, 1833-1902, from family members, public figures, military colleagues, solicitors, bankers and academic researchers. The subject matter strongly reflects Victorian Britain, on the themes of W.R.O.G. 's military career with the 13th Light Dragoons, 1841-1855; his political career in Ireland, 1841-1874; the public school education of his sons; the Crimean War, 1854-1855; the British campaign in Egypt, 1882; regimental life in colonial India, 1892-1899; Conservative and Unionist politics; game laws and blood sports. Many of the letters concern Ireland and Gladstone 's policies on government purchase of the railways, 1869-1873, Catholic and Protestant tensions, 1875-1876, violence linked to the land question and evictions of tenants, 1876-1887. Other points of interest are: the history of the parish of Selatyn; the headship of Deuddwr school, 1880, 1889; publication of the Gwalia newspaper, 1886-1887; erection of a memorial to Bishop John Owen in St Asaph Cathedral, 1898; and the peerage of John Ralph Ormsby-Gore, 1875; the series includes some drafts and copies of outgoing correspondence.

Crëwr | Creator: Ormsby-Gore, William George Arthur, 1885-1964.

Dyddiad | Date: 1891-1950. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters to Margaret Ethel Ormsby-Gore from her son, William George Arthur, 1891-1950.

The subject matter covers his election and early career as Conservative MP for the Denbigh Boroughs under the Liberal Asquith government, 1907-1914 and later for Stafford, 1918-1938; his service during the First World War with the Shropshire Yeomanry, the Arab Bureau, the War Office Cabinet and the Zionist Commission in Palestine; his attendance at the Paris Peace Conference, 1919; several government appointments mainly in colonial administration, 1920-1938 and in the Cabinet as First Commissioner of Works, 1931; his succession to the title of Harlech and selection as Lord Lieutenant of Merioneth, 1938; responsibility for civil defence in Yorkshire, 1939-1940; his appointment as High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in South Africa; 1941-1944; his receipt of the Order of the Garter, 1948; and a bank directorship in South Africa, 1950. The letters comment (often indiscreetly) on other politicians, including Lloyd George, Stanley Baldwin and Winston Churchill, cabinet business and political issues such as: National Insurance; the Parliament Act, 1911; Lloyd George's radical social reforms; Disestablishment of the Church in Wales; Home Rule and the rise of Irish nationalism, 1912-1921, 1948; the General Strike, 1926; the Socialist election victory, 1929; the Great Depression, 1931; influence of trade unions, 1935; agricultural policy, 1931-1939; social, economic and governmental aspects of the Second World War, generally in Europe and more specifically in South Africa under Smuts's premiership; and significant changes in post-war society. The letters from abroad keenly observe the geography, culture and politics of Europe, Egypt, Palestine, the East and West Indies, Africa, Canada and the United States. Other topics comprise the investiture of the Prince of Wales, 1911; an official cabinet visit to the King at Windsor Castle, 1932; the funeral of George V, 1936; Gore's own lifelong interest in architecture, art and sculpture beginning as early as 1902-1903, with later references to the National Gallery, 1928, and the National Museum of Wales, 1939; the management of Derrycarne Estate until its sale in 1924 and alterations to the Brogyntyn estates through death duties and wartime economy, 1938-1945. The letters are accompanied by a set of autobiographical notes, purposely created for clarification of the contents.

Private letters exchanged between Margaret Godolphin, [c. 1698]-1764, and various members of the Godolphin family of Abertanat, Eton and Thames Ditton, 1698-1763, including her parents, Sydney and Susanna, her sisters, Ellen and Mary, her nephew, Francis, their Hoblyn and Pendarves relatives, and others; together with letters from friends, solicitors and other professionals. The contents reflect in great detail the personal, domestic and social circumstances of an eighteenth century upper class family, against the background of the Jacobite Wars. Recurrent topics include the management of the Abertanat estate, especially the exploitation of timber, the death of Master Henry Godolphin, 1722, physical ailments, financial investments, family settlements and inheritance. The correspondence of Ellen, Margaret and Mary Godolphin from 1728 to 1730 shows a preoccupation with the reluctance of Miss Mary Godolphin to marry William Owen of Porkington!

Dyddiad | Date: [c. 1698]-1764. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters to Margaret ('Peggy') Godolphin, [c. 1698]-1764, mainly of a personal nature, from Godolphin family members, 1703-1764, other relatives and friends, and official correspondence from solicitors and agents. General topics not previously mentioned in detail include the practical problems of administering the Abertanat estate with inefficient agents, financial shortages, poaching activities and litigation with neighbouring landowners; Margaret Godolphin's purchases of Maesgwyn, 1756, and Moreton Hall, 1760-1764; the inheritance of Broniarth manor and the rest of the Abertanat estate; a church preferment in Shropshire, 1760; and problems incurred by the turnpikes near Oswestry, 1756. Of particular interest are the family letters from Ellen and Francis Godolphin on the upbringing of the Owen children, fashion, high society gossip and the Hanoverian court, including the accession of George II, 1727.

Cyfres | Series PPD1. vtls004521587: Journals and diaries of Emily Charlotte Seymour and her mother,

Dyddiad | Date: 1844-1890. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Journals and diaries of Emily Charlotte Seymour (married name Ormsby-Gore), dated between 1844 and 1890. The first seven volumes contain accounts of the family's voyages with her father, Admiral Sir George Francis Seymour, to Chile, Peru and the Falkland Islands, and overland journeys from Valparaiso to Santiago and elsewhere in Chile, 1844-1847, followed by visits to Juan Fernandes and Rio [de Janeiro] in 1848, describing throughout the travelling conditions, climate, landscape, animals, native inhabitants, immigrant settlers, entertainments and systems of government. The contents of some of the volumes are repeated. The later volume of 1890 is mostly concerned with family and domestic matters at Brogyntyn and in London; it also reflects Emily 's interests in music, high society, the Victorian court, parliamentary news, conservative politics and the Primrose League, and her involvement with the Oswestry and Ellesmere Cottage Hospital, Pantglas School and general parish affairs in Selatyn, Oswestry and Llanfihangel-y-Traethau. There is also a diary of her mother, Georgiana Mary Seymour, containing brief entries relating to family and friends, 1869-1870.

Cyfres | Series PQH2. vtls004525947: Literature collected by Frances Morres Gore and family,

Crëwr | Creator: Gore, Frances Morres, -1829

Dyddiad | Date: 1809-1832. (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Notebooks containing copies of published poems, ballads, songs and prose works in English, French and Italian, translations from classical and continental authors, and original compositions, compiled mainly by Frances Morres Gore in her own hand, with some contributions by others and a small number of printed items, 1809-1832. The authors most commonly represented here are Lord Byron, Mme de Stael, Thomas ('Anacreon') Moore, Mary Robinson, Robert Southey and Edward Young. Others include Robert Burns, Thomas Campbell, William Cowper, Richard Cumberland, Thomas Dibdin, Mme de Genlis, Oliver Goldsmith, Reginald Heber, Horace, Leigh Hunt, John Langhorne, C[harles] L[loyd]?, John Milton, Mary Russell Mitford, James Montgomery, Cornelius Neale, Sydney Owenson, Petrarch, Alexander Pope, Charles Phillips, Sir Walter Scott, Percy Shelley, James Smith, Mary Tighe, Voltaire and Richard West, as well as Frances Morres Gore and her son William Gore. The content of the volumes is similar throughout, with the exception of the last. Many of the works relate to themes of romance, friendship, women, mortality, moralistic and philosophical platitudes, mythology, the natural world and the Irish landscape. Other compositions concern historical figures, the foibles of contemporary society, antipathy to the Georgian monarchy, Hanoverian government policies, and the Napoleonic Wars. Mrs Gore 's interest in the theatre is evidenced by a significant number of items referring to actors and playwrights, George Colman, William Conway, Robert Elliston, David Garrick, the Kemble family, Henrietta O'Neill, Alexander Fisher Palmer, Shakespeare, R.B. Sheridan and Sarah Siddons in performances at various English and Irish theatres between 1808 and 1824.

Is-fonds | Subfonds Clenennau letters and papers. vtls004445659: Clenennau Letters and Papers,

Crëwr | Creator: Maurice, William, Sir, 1542-1622.

Dyddiad | Date: 1485-1698 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Letters exchanged between members of the Maurice and Owen families of Clenennau and Brogyntyn, and other correspondence from friends or associates in Wales and England, together with a number of important official documents deriving from county administration in Caernarfonshire during the Tudor and Stuart periods, 1485, 1573-1698. Many of the early letters and papers, 1580-1622, relate to the joint deputy lieutenancy in Caernarfonshire of Sir William Maurice and Sir John Wynn, showing their preoccupation with the raising and organisation of militia troops for the defence of Caernarfonshire and for despatch to Ireland. Other topics include Sir William Maurice's position as deputy vice-admiral of North Wales and the protracted civil lawsuits in which he was engaged. The collection also constitutes an important historical source for the conduct of the Civil War in North Wales. Items from that period primarily concern Sir John Owen and his brother, Col. William Owen, Royalist commanders at Conwy and Harlech respectively, and their subsequent treatment under the Commonwealth and Restoration, 1643-1666. Many of the letters from 1678 to 1698 reveal the life of Sir Robert Owen, his debts, estate business, cultural interests and attachment to the Jacobite cause, together with contemporary political news. Apart from individuals already mentioned, prominent correspondents include the Privy Council of Elizabeth I, mostly through Henry Herbert, President of the Council in the Marches of Wales, 1587-1600; Sir Henry Johnes of Abermarlais, 1605-1616; Ralph, Lord Eure, 1607-1617; members of the Brynker family, 1603-1681; the Wynn family of Glyn and Sylfaen, 1625-1697; the Anwyl family of Park, 1636-1693; Charles I, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice, 1642-1647; Lord Byron, 1644-1648; John Williams, Archbishop of York, 1645-1646; George Twisleton, 1649-1660; the Godolphin family of Abertanat, 1658-1698; John Gadbury, 1679-1688; and Edward Lhuyd, 1696-1697.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The Clennau letters and papers, selected for their historical significance, were extracted from the main Brogyntyn estate and family records, calendared individually in detail, and published as a supplement to the Journal of the NLW. Unfortunately, this process removed the documents from their context, and researchers should give equal consideration to the remainder of the Brogyntyn estate and family records.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The calendar of Clennau letters and papers is defective in many aspects and should be used with caution.

Clenennau letters and papers 1. vtls005593899 ISYSARCHB54	File - Elizabeth I and the Council in the Marches of Wales at Shrewsbury to Wil[liam] Thomas, Rowland Puleston, William Morris The ..., Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Elizabeth I and the Council in the Marches of Wales at Shrewsbury to Wil[liam] Thomas, Rowland Puleston, William Morris The Younger and William Ap Eliza, gent's. Instructions to call before them parties named in an enclosed bill to examine the matter therein mentioned and, by their own means and the parties' assent, to order the matter finally if possible. They are to bind any obstinate defendants in the sum of £40 to appear before the Council on Nov. 5, also to enquire how many of the defendants upon being served with precepts refuse to appear before them. Upon appearance the defendants shall not depart without the Council's permission. If they refuse to enter into bonds they are to be committed to ward. Instructions to send the bill and bonds to the Council, with a certificate of their doings. Torn and stained. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1585, June 12.

	According to his promise, sends £20 by the bearer. Because he had promised to pay he sold his cattle before the fair to a drover who sold them again at the fair for £5 and odd money more than he had paid Thomas Glynne for them. This the bearer can testify for the fair was very good. For the rest of the money for which Thomas Glynne is bound the bearer shall make William Mores a note, or else Thomas Glynne will make William Mores such assurance as William Mores thinks sufficient when they meet. Thomas Glynne requests William Mores to deliver the bond to the bearer as promised. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 2. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Henry ap Hugh and John ap Hoell, two of the tenants of Botevin, Caernarfonshire, have been suitors of the lease of the said village. The lease is now granted to them, both of the part of which they are tenants and of the rest, to the use of all the other tenants. The suit was painful and chargeable and by order of the Court of the Exchequer Chamber Rowland Owen who had an interest in part of the township is to have £40 by way of composition, to be paid equally by the tenants. Requests William Morris and Eliza Cadwallader to call the tenants together and according to the terms of their lease and a rate set down by Mr Baron Gent and Mr Auditor Hanbune of the tenancies to require them to contribute to the £40, those who refuse to appear before William Cecil next term. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 3. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Upon receipt of Henry Herbert's letter, have called before them within their several divisions all men able to provide 'ffurniture' for the Queen's service and have assigned them presently to provide light horses, armour, weapons and other 'ffurniture' and munitions fit for war, according to their circumstances. Have chosen men able to use the arms and taken musters thereof. Intend to take more musters, and have warned the men to be ready upon ten days' warning. The number of light horses, arms and men appears in a book of musters delivered to the sheriff to be handed over to William Mauris, esq., one of the deputy lieutenants and provost marshal, for delivery to Henry Herbert, according to instructions. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 4. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Received letters from the Lord President's officers and instructions how to perform the composition. He perceives how essential will be William Maurice's efforts as 'the onlie man acquainted with all reconyngs'. It must be dealt with in the next term, which requires the greater haste in this, because of the dangerous times, the bare state of the country and 'the special chardge ymposed uppon us'. Has summoned the best men in the country to assemble at Carnarvon on Friday 16 June to ccess a mize for the provision of pounders, bullets and other necessities for 'the furnyshing of this service', for the defence of the country which, being a sea coast, offers greater difficulty, and to proceed with the composition. Earl of Pembroke. The Queen has been informed by letters of certain gentlemen in Devon and Cornwall of the recent sighting not far from the Isles of Scilly of a fleet of 120 ships, believed to be Spanish. Therefore maritime counties on the west coast and the counties adjoining them which are appointed to send supplies for the defence thereof upon any landing should be prepared for defence in case of any attempted invasion by the fleet. Until more is discovered of the fleet's intentions, preparations should be made quietly in the lieutenancy to send supplies to the maritime counties when required according to instructions already given relating thereto, with as little disturbance as possible to the gathering in of the harvest. At present no more detailed instructions can be given. Postscript: The forces appointed to defend the Isle of Wight should be urgently made ready. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has received letters from the Earl of Pembroke, and understands William Maurice has also received a copy. Request urgently to execute the instructions contained in the letter 'for yor Lymytte'. To confer before all the men are in readiness would be to waste time. Intends to make 200 men ready in his limit, leaving the towns to their own defence, the men to be 'of the best sort' who are not fit for harvest work. In William Maurice's limit there must be more since there are no towns to defend. There is available no match, powder or bullets in the country to be bought. Laments 'our' negligence in not levying the mize. Directs William Maurice that the beacons on the coast be watched and to send note of his readiness and the number of men within 8 days, undertakes to do likewise. Warning that William Maurice's watchmen should send no false alarms. Postscript: Intends to spend several days in [] hundred and to trouble only the '[bett]er sorte'. Clenennau Letters and Papers 11. vtls005593910 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Gwydir, to his cousin William Maurice, esq, 1587/8, Jan. 3. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Received William Maurice's letter by Ellis ap Caddwaladr, John Wynn's cousin. John Wynn & William Maurice should have conferred before William Maurice proceeded in appointing musters for some commotes. It will cause confusion for William Maurice to proceed where John Wynn has so much experience, without having John Wynn's books, which do not agree with William Maurice's. Has had 'paines' in bringing William Maurice's limit to proportion and had little co-operation whence it was due. Had intended upon seeing William Maurice to show him 'the state of the cause where I left yt' and to hand it over to be finished. Expected some thanks for his efforts - he would not undertake the same again for a hundred pounds. But William Maurice appears to disagree with what John Wynn has done, without knowing the reasons therefore, and intends to 'sheefle the cardes anewe'. Advises against such action; others are moved by malice to advise it, being anxious to cause a rift and 'to make us a pageant to laugh at'. John Wynn, having forseen this, can give a good account of his actions, but if William Maurice crosses him, John Wynn must either suffer and be discredited or question William Maurice's actions, which may be avoided 'if you afforde but the travaill'. Proposes a meeting, either at Gwydir or at Penmachno or Capel Curig - John Wynn must be able to return to Gwydir the same night because of his 'sickly body'. They may discuss Gruffydd ap Gruffydd and the other matters in William Maurice's letter at their meeting. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau Letters and Papers 11. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Various subjects have in recent years withdrawn from lawful obedience in that some have refused to go to church; they cannot therefore be trusted as good subjects. No invasion would be attempted without the hope held out by the fugitives and rebels abroad concerning the recusants. In such doubtful times recusants should be restrained so that they give no assistance to the enemy, and the enemy has no hope of relief from them. Command to ascertain the number of recusants in his lieutenancy and their quality and ability, to commit the most obstinate to suitable prisons and to place the rest, 'that ar of value and not so obstinate', in the custody of some ecclesiastic persons or other well affected gentlemen, there to remain at the charge of the recusant. Reminds William Morris of his task so that he may attend to it and not busy himself with other causes, neglecting the one which 'ought to be most recommended unto you'. Clenennau Letters and Papers 16. vtls005593915 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Gwydir, to his cousin 1588, May 12. William Maurice, esq, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has spent all day 'hamouring' at the certificate to bring it to the required form, but has given up for, on consideration, thinks it impossible for any man to reduce their certificate to follow the letter of pattern 'which is the shape of a greater garment than our clothe will reach to make'. Dare not alter anything because of the express command not to 'decline on the right hand nor on the left', and especially having certified the best form they could devise, such as the country would bear, 'and that not lyked of'. Thought it best to delay, rather than to commit too gross an error in haste. Cannot learn of any man who understands it thoroughly for it seems according to the pattern that they should have pioneers in their trained bands; thinks he can go as close to it as any man, but that point is a mystery to him. Has sent William Maurice their certificates to the Privy Council and the Lord President, with a note of the 'marshall men' and of John Wynn's limit, except for the bills and pioneers of which William Maurice may put in what numbers he pleases so that he, in Shropshire, can learn the full meaning of the pattern and try to frame their certificate to agree therewith: William Maurice may despatch the whole by this bearer. John Wynn scraped a little at it but, going awry left it. They say the pattern was taken from the Hertfordshire certificate; Mr Powell may clarify this, but it is 'lattine and hebrew in this country'. Has too many 'vents' to have any money by him, wishes that he had in order to please William Maurice, but surely William Maurice should have it. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau Letters and Papers 16. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Care should be had that the beacons are watched; the other orders should be carried out with speed and diligence. In such doubtful times it commonly happens that false rumours are spread abroad which cause confusion in the minds of the people; the authors thereof should be found and severely punished. Henry Herbert should appoint by his authority a provost marshal to punish and prevent inconvenience caused by the number of vagrants in the country, the marshal to 'peruse' the country and be assisted by the justices and constables in apprehending, stocking and imprisoning those who will not work. Clenennau Letters and Papers 22.	File - The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Whitehall, to [Henry Herbert], 1589, May 24.

vtls005593922 ISYSARCHB54	Earl of Pembroke, President of [the Council in ..., Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Whitehall, to [Henry Herbert], Earl of Pembroke, President of [the Council in the Marches of] the principality of Wales and Lieutenant of the counties of Wiltshire and Somerset, and of the counties of Wales and the Marches. Henry Herbert, as Lieutenant General of the counties of Somerset, Wiltshire, Shropshire, Worcestershire, Hereford, Monmouthshire and the principality of Wales, has received various orders for mustering, arming, arraying and organising the forces of the counties in his charge, both 'on horsbacke and on foote', wherein last year he was active in his labours, both personally and through his deputies. But now the winter and spring are past, and summer well advanced, and nothing has been done to renew the former orders to make ready the forces of the country, as is essential. The Queen, who is most anxious that her whole realm be made ready without delay to withstand enemy attacks, commands her Lieutenants that all directions given last year or in previous years for viewing, mustering, arraying, arming and making ready the forces, namely for horse, foot and pioneers, and for provisions of powder, match, carriages etc., be diligently renewed. Where there was last year, or is now, a lack of men, armour, weapons, horses, powder and munitions or other necessities, they should by supplied. Let Henry Herbert by his authority assemble forthwith the justices of the peace whom he has already used in this kind of service or now thinks fit to use, to arrange for the county forces, namely horse and foot, with their captains and other officers, to be instructed to be ready at convenient places on one or several days soon, to be fully equipped, viewed and mustered, Henry Herbert or his deputies to muster them at suitable places where least inconvenience is caused to the people. Whereupon let there be replaced any captains, officers and soldiers of those put into bands last year, who are missing for any reason, and let all the forces be put into bands under captains and officers with 'furniture of all thinges warlyke' such as was formerly directed. For detailed instructions the Council refer Henry Herbert to former directions for equipping the people, who are to be armed on horseback and on foot, the provision of stores of powder and munitions, the watches in the county, the maintenance and guarding of beacons in the usual places and all other things generally appertaining to a Lieutenant's authority, in order with the assistance and advice of chosen justices, to organise the country, maintain peace and suppress riots and rebellions. Because of the expense to the country of maintaining many people in training as was done last year in some places, the Council refers this matter to Henry Herbert's discretion. Henry Herbert should see that at the musters the men are able to use their weapons and to have suitable armour and weapons, the horses and riders to be well-equipped and ready to serve therewith, after which the Council, anxious to keep down the costs, think that there should be no training. The musters should be taken at several places and times such as are suitable and least awkward for those who travel there. Clenennau Letters and Papers 24. vtls005593924 ISYSARCHB54	File - Henry Moston, Bangor, to William Moris, esq., Clenennau,	1589, Aug. 1.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Robert ap David ap Robert of the parish of Cricieth, a neighbour of William Moris and the bearer hereof, calls his wife to co-habitation. She has fled from her husband, probably having little comfort from him, to her brother and mother, and has taken with her all that remains of a hundred pounds' worth of goods which they had at their marriage. Although her husband does not have a house for her, she must by law follow him and be at his disposition, which is grievous, and as William Moris may see, miserable the more so because of the husband's wretched state. Her brother and friends will say that they keep her to prevent her begging, but she has, of his and her own, cattle, 20s. a year and other things, as the husband will say. The husband humbly petitions William Moris to call the parties before him and 'to order him eyther keeping or portion - considering his case and weakness'. If Henry Moston called her in, it would cost her more than would content the husband, who gives William Moris God's blessing and says he [William Moris] has pity and compassion on the distressed. Postscript: Although the 20s. a year comes from her previous husband, 'bad is her lucke', for by right of law it is her husband's. 'Women may not be their owne carvers'. Clenennau Letters and Papers 25. vtls005593925 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), at the court at Richmond, to [Henry Herbert, Earl of Pembroke],	1589/90, Jan. 9.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Informed that the King of Spain is making great preparations of shipping and 'other warlicke provicions' with intent to make an attempt this spring or summer on some part of the Queen's dominions, the Queen, anxious to omit nothing in the defence of her realm and subjects to withstand the King's malicious purposes, commands that the forces in recent years prepared, mustered and armed, be put ready immediately. Let Henry Herbert study previous orders for ordering, training and preparing the forces of the counties in his Lieutenancy and for other matters relating to martial government, and consider how he and his deputies have fulfilled the same, so that where he finds an omission in the requirements he may immediately either see the same executed or inform the Council why the same cannot conveniently be done. Let Henry Herbert see that the ordinary bands of horse and foot are ready and equipped so that a view may be taken on March 1, whereby the Queen may be better satisfied if she sends some special person there before then, as she wishes to take a view of the forces, to report to her of their state and how complete and well-equipped are the bands. Let Henry Herbert give special orders to the captains and leaders of the trained bands henceforth because of the doubtful times not to be absent from their shires without urgent occasions of business and on special leave, and to see that the bands are kept complete and equipped and any defects applied immediately. Orders should be given to the soldiers of the trained bands to be resident in the counties and not to be out of the way so that they may be ready upon reasonable warning to be viewed or otherwise employed. Especially the Queen wishes great care to be taken in the choice of the shot, to be resident in the parishes and hundreds where they are chosen. She has been informed that because former directions were not executed the charges in training have been wasted because the parties enrolled have not continued in the bands whereby through frequent training they might have become perfect shots. Certain towns in the lieutenancy were appointed to store powder and match, and although this was often required, little or no provision has been made. Let Henry Herbert cause the towns appointed to provide the amounts specified, details of which are included in an enclosed note, and see the same kept in a convenient place under the charge of suitable persons. Henry

	Herbert has also received orders to have a certain number of soldiers always ready in certain counties in Wales to be sent if required to Ireland in case of an enemy invasion. These numbers are considered too few to withstand such foreign powers as are likely to be sent, and the Council has been driven to increase the same. Request to Henry Herbert to cause the numbers already appointed and as many more as are noted in the enclosed schedule to be armed and prepared so that upon short warning they may be ready with their arms and equipment under their leaders to be sent to the ports named in the schedule to be transported to Ireland. Since the Queen is informed that some subjects have been grievously hurt or slain in training by small 'haleshott' which is in the powder either by 'lewdnesse' of those who sell the same or by negligence, let special care be taken that the powder is perfectly 'garbelled' to avoid those inconveniences. 	Enquires how far forward the mise is in William Mauryce's limit. John Wynn is 'undefully' troubled about the sub-divisions. There is and always has been envy and emulation between the towns with their liberties and the country, each seeking to lay the burden on the other. Believing this mise to be made without a warrant, they will prove more contentious than ever before. Also 'som croked mate' will surely raise the matter either in the [Council in the] Marches or before the Lords above. Thinks fit therefore to inform the Lord Lieutenant of the causes of the 'cease', the assent of the justices and the 'bakwardnes' of some who will be against it, and to ask him to send a commission for the levy thereof if he thinks it necessary; if he does not, William Mauryce and John Wynn, upon being informed of his pleasure, will 'surcease' from further proceedings. They have the Council's letters for their warrant if they had begun the levy in time, but the fear is over in part for this year, and until a new one arises, the country will not willingly pay. But that is no discharge to John Wynn and William Mauryce and they had better confess their negligence and omission to the Lord Lieutenant than to 'lett' it to a greater inconvenience. 'Yett (as god hath ordained the matter,) is tyme enoghe, when Rumors of present Danger Do cease then are all things to be had best cheap'. Is very busy with his own affairs. If William Mauryce will draw up a letter to his lordship containing the whole matter, or a short letter and instructions, which John Wynn prefers, and send them to John Wynn by a bearer, who could take them to his lordship, John Wynn will sign them and pay half the bearer's charges. Let this be done quickly so that at the latest they have the mise gathered or well under way by the assizes. Let William Mauryce send to John Wynn a copy of Ric' ap Madog's lease of Carneeldy, so that John Wynn may know its expiry date. William Mauryce has frequently promised to send it, but has not yet done so. If the mise should not take place, it would be a discredit to John Wynn & William Mauryce to attempt what they should not 'wad thorow'. Therefore let William Mauryce 'call all your senses together' to enforce the necessity thereof in his instructions or letter, and send word to John Wynn as soon as possible. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau Letters and Papers 30. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

They were unable to give her an answer except that they 'hoped well thereof', since last spring all her lieutenants were especially instructed to take views and musters either personally or through their deputies of all her forces in their lieutenantancies. But they were commanded not to draw the people to general musters because of the approaching harvest, and the Council has not received certificates from the lieutenants as they expected. Also the Queen considers that her forces may be greatly diminished and armour and weapons be wasted or decayed because of the intermission of musters and the change of men by death or renewal [?removal] and that because of God's goodness and the Queen's navy on the seas and her army in Ireland have prevented the King of Spain's army and navy (though they were very great) from approaching the coasts of the Queen's dominions all this year, perhaps many subjects have been led to a kind of security and have neglected to keep their forces in a convenient state. But the King of Spain has this year made great preparations, building new ships on all the northern coasts of Spain and in the quantities of food, ammunition and clothes for a great navy so that (unless God prevents him) he may be expected next spring or summer to make a great attempt with his navy and mighty armies against England and Ireland. The Queen therefore commands the Council to inform all her lieutenants hereof and to order them now before winter, especially in the next month before the term begins, to cause general musters to be made of all horse and foot appointed to be equipped and put into bands. Let Henry Herbert 'all busines sett aparte' quickly send his usual orders to cause musters to be made of all the forces in the counties of his lieutenantancy in the best manner possible and according to former instructions, to which he is referred. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has sent a letter by his cousin Mores Lewis to the Lord Lieutenant, with a copy of the agreement between John Wynn and William Maurice and the justices of the peace to lay the mise and the reasons why the lay was necessary, as delivered by John Wynn & William Maurice to the justices of the peace; has kept copies for William Maurice. Has requested the Lord Lieutenant to direct a commission to William Maurice & John Wynn for the speedy levying of the mise, and to bind to appear before himself any who oppose it. Will have an answer in the holidays; sent also a remembrance to 'mr messenger'. Meanwhile has determined to have the mise cessed and delivered to the collectors in every quarter of his limit, which in effect has already been done, and then to leave the gathering until they receive the commission and the new sheriff is established in office. In the interregnum of the sheriffs the gaolers will neglect to 'Receve or keep narrowly' those whom John Wynn & William Maurice commit, which John Wynn will see to when the new sheriff has taken office. Then 'will we go Rowndly in land' with the levying, and gather it in a fortnight. Commends the same course to William Maurice. Has cast the accounts which he will bring to the 'quarter sises'. William Maurice may have at Conwy as much powder as he could demand for the mise, for John Wynn has some just come to Chester. Postscript: Request to see the mise presently cessed and delivered to the collectors. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau Letters and Papers 35. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Since Richard Bulkley last came to Cheadle, his kinsmen, having the same need as it seems William Maurice now has to use horses, begged him so earnestly that he has been obliged to give two away since the beginning of Christmas. Is at present therefore only partly equipped for his own use, for continual attendance and daily sending of his men, which will admit no delay, since his occasions are many, have worn out a number of horses and made them unfit for the saddle. William Maurice's silence and Richard Bulkley's forgetfulness are the reasons why William Maurice has been wanting for a horse for so long. But once Richard Bulkley's business is over, which he expects it will be shortly, he will not forget William Maurice 'for one to serve your turne', as at present he is unable to do. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau Letters and Papers 36. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Does not doubt William Morrice's friendly and best efforts in the execution thereof and hopes that the country will, in this manner of proceeding with them, have good cause to thank him in respect of the favour shown them, which otherwise they are unlikely to find, if it is not now accepted, as they should well perceive if it came to any other's land, and that to their further charge and trouble. Let him make every effort for the quicker & more effectual accomplishment thereof. William Morrice will perform Anne Dudley a good kindness in the execution of this service, and he shall find her not unmindful to require the same, as she has always done hitherto. Postscript, probably in Anne Dudley's own hand: Has grounded her business on William Morrice's sound and good advice. Has, along with some of her friends, chosen Ellice Price to be joined in commission with others of her officers whom she sends down about the lands there. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Theobalds, to [Henry Herbert], Earl of Pembroke, lieutenant of the principality and Marches of Wales. Ships of the King of Spain's navy have come to this coast and are expected to 'infest' some part of the west, especially the Isles of Scilly, and perhaps to make an attempt on Milford Haven or those parts. The Queen wishes Henry Herbert to be informed thereof, in order that he can give good direction to those who have charge under him in Pembrokeshire and those parts, so that the forces may be put in sufficient readiness to defend the coast and repulse any enemy attempt. For the better performance thereof, the Queen, having no other in whom she reposes such trust for that service, wishes Henry Herbert to go there 'especially in these times of Doubte and Daunger, when the enemy ceaseth not by all maliciouse practises to worke his will to the annoyance of hir Maiestie and hir subiectes.' The Council sends Henry Herbert directions to renew the beacon watches, and to inform them of anything noteworthy. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Clenennau Letters and Papers 45. vtls005593946 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Gwydir, to his cousin William Mauryce, esq., Clenennau, 1591, Oct. 20. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has lately received so many commissions from London and other business that he is unable to come to the Quarter Sessions. Hopes William Mauryce will supply the place of both of them in dispatching the country's affairs. 'You see owre enemyes sleep not Drawynge ther maxims and stratagemes from the fowntane of Suttelty and chappell of yll Cownsell.' John Wynn & William Mauryce must take heed to their doings and not omit anything. Let William Mauryce direct a warrant to William Williams to come to the Quarter Sessions to show his armour, and also to Williams' tenants and followers in the parish of Llanllechid. John Wynn's clerk will attend William Mauryce with the muster books. If Williams 'Refuse no more but? go and certifye', the muster master must serve the warrant upon him personally. If nothing is done now touching the mise let it rest for ever. The bearer, John Wynn's tenant, has often asked John Wynn for a letter on his behalf to William Mauryce assuring John Wynn that neither had he given William Mauryce cause for offence nor would meddle in his father's matter but that only (lest he should be a witness on his father's side) he was made party to the suit which he protested that he would not so that he might rest quiet. Because John Wynn did not know to what degree the bearer offended William Mauryce he refused him. If the bearer's fault has not been great and his submission may give William Mauryce ease or no harm, John Wynn will be his surety that he shall do no more. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau Letters and Papers 45. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau Letters and Papers 46. vtls005593947 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Gwydir, to his cousin Wyllyam Mauryce, esq., Clenennau, 1591, Nov. 1. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has sent with the bearer the certificate to the Privy Council, done verbatim like last year's. Wyllyam Mauryce should not return it without the Lord Lieutenant's knowledge, showing him that a mise was cessed of £300 by consent of the justices, which would have put their country in a state to answer this proposition, and that William Williams has so persuaded the country, that they will pay nothing but by coercion. To the collectors they deliver distresses and say they have no money. This is general throughout the shire and his lordship should be acquainted therewith, so that he may see the cause of the obstinacy punished and either write to the country or do as he thinks best to 'worke the multitude to conformity'. John Wynn had rather 'fle hogs' than deal with the multitude which begins to respite. Let Wyllyam Mauryce advise himself wisely. There is no resistance in John Wynn's limit, but distresses and no payment. The reasons for the cess are laid down in John Wynn and Wyllyam Mauryce's letter to the Lord President a year ago. Sends also John Wynn and Wyllyam Mauryce's answer to his lordship's letter, and their accounts signed and sealed by John Wynn as required in the letter. Let Wyllyam Mauryce amend the receipt of the mise as required. Encloses also his cousin Robert's letter, David Lloyd Draper's indenture, and William Lloyd's accounts, so that Wyllyam Mauryce has everything of John Wynn's to answer his lordship at all points, for finding a sum unlevied he will impute it to their fault. Has therefore sent everything relevant, hoping Wyllyam Mauryce has the same. Request to keep them safe. Cannot find the old commission. Has drawn up in both their names certain articles against William Williams for Wyllyam Mauryce to present his lordship. Let Wyllyam Mauryce make any additions he can. Has no money to spare at present for the loan which Wyllyam Mauryce requests. Money has never come in so slowly as this year because of bad markets; also John Wynn has lately sent all he had for some business in London. Postscript: Nov. 3. Unless his lordship takes a severe course with William Williams, let Wyllyam Mauryce ask him to discharge John Wynn & Wyllyam Mauryce from the lieutenantancy. John Wynn will ask to be freed unless they may have things in due order; he fears the 'after clap' in such a great cause. Upon Wyllyam Mauryce's directions, has promised the bearer ample favours to conceal

	nothing of what Williams [sic] Williams told him. Wyllyam Mauryce must put him on oath before his lordship and if he is honest 'you shall have William Williams forthe cominge. Clenennau Letters and Papers 48. vtls005593949 ISYSARCHB54	File - H[enry Herbert, Earl of] Pembroke, Hereford, to his friends John Gwynn, Gwedir, and William Maurice, esq's, deputy lieutenants of Caernarfonshire ..., 1591, Nov. 22. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: H[enry Herbert, Earl of] Pembroke, Hereford, to his friends John Gwynn, Gwedir, and William Maurice, esq's, deputy lieutenants of Caernarfonshire, and the justices of the peace of the same. Was informed in June that sums of money assessed and levied in Caernarfonshire for the provision of equipment of war, were not used therefor but either kept by the deputy lieutenants or put to their private use. Requested to account for the money and its use the deputy lieutenants have sent him signed and sealed accounts. So that it may appear to the country whether they have been wronged by untrue complaints or the country by untrue accounts, at the next general meeting let the accounts, a copy whereof is enclosed, be published. If they are found just let all men know that Henry Herbert dislikes such 'leude' dealing as has been used against them and will see that the deputy lieutenants' 'credits shalbe repaired by their discreditts, who have causelesslie complained'. But if the accounts are unjust the deputy lieutenants may feel what it is to abuse the Queen's trust placed in them. One thing not yet considered may cause the country justly to complain, but it is not the deputies' fault, namely that those appointed to levy the money in every commote have levied more than was prescribed or paid less to the deputy lieutenants than they have collected. The collectors must be called to public account, to show what they gathered and to whom they delivered it. If abuse in them is found let their punishment be seen openly; if not, those must be condemned who slanderously complained and hindered public services by seeking private and petty revenge. Is informed that many gentlemen assessed to find horses or provide equipment of War have not gone to musters to show the same particularly William Williams of Cochwillan, esq., who not only himself disobeys but also encourages others to do so. The complaint was delivered to William Williams and answered by him. He regrets his lack of duty, saying it was from ignorance not wilfulness, and has

	promised to obey the deputy lieutenants in the services which they can command, to show the arms and equipment appointed from him, to pay the money assessed upon him for the Queen's service and to persuade his tenants to do likewise. If he does this publicly he shall not be punished for his former contempt. There are many quarrels among the gentlemen of the county, which Henry Herbert regrets. 'For how can your myndes be united in publique defence, when they are devyded throughe pryvatt quarrells. And what hope of succour in the feild may any man have from him who is his professed Enemie at home'. The Queen's service for defence in time of danger cannot proceed if it is disobeyed because it is entrusted to another. 'All men can not be Deputie Lieutenants, some must governe, some must obey'. Such 'crosse doings' should not happen and may not be suffered. As a friend and the Queen's trusted servant, advises them to abandon such lack of clarity and to join in Christian love and neighbourly friendship for the furtherance of the Queen's service, Henry Herbert's comfort and their own credit. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau Letters and Papers 48. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau Letters and Papers 51. vtls005593952 ISYSARCHB54	File - [...] LA Fontaine, at the Court, to his friend William Moris, deputy vice-admiral of Pwllheli and those parts, 1592, Oct. 19. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The bearer, John Fumeaux, a poor Frenchman, came to the French ambassador complaining that William Moris arrested his ship, which was loaded with salt and going to Ireland to fetch corn, of which he had proof and passports. William Moris, though he saw these, nevertheless stopped him, and sent away all his men. It is strange that one put in trust to do justice should molest a poor stranger from greed to get his goods and make him good prize, with no other cause than the lie written by William Moris to Dr Caesar. The ambassador has credit with the Queen to have justice done upon his request. William Moris cannot make the ship a wreck nor good prize, - it is in good condition and neither Spaniard nor Leaguer; he has no cause but his greed for money. Writes by command of the ambassador, who requests William Moris to deliver the ship and goods without any 'chargee paying', otherwise the Admiral will not believe William Moris's words. Let William Moris use his discretion and not trouble the poor man otherwise the Ambassador will show him what authority he has on poor Frenchmen's rights. He does not seek to molest anyone, but cannot suffer to see poor men vexed who are the King's subjects. In many counties appointees as Justices of the Peace have not taken oaths such as are required by law before taking office. The Queen desires a speedy remedy. Because it is uncertain who has not taken the oath, let the recipients before 20 Nov. next or within fifteen days after the receipt of these letters arrange a sessions of the peace at the usual places and summon thereto all the justices living in the county. Let the custos rotulorum, the sheriff, and other justices appointed by a writ of dedimus potestatem require all the justices openly to take the accustomed oath for peace and the oath of supremacy, as prescribed by the statutes; they should then make due return of the writ under their lands, informing Chancery how many justices took their oaths in the sessions, so that the Chancellor may be informed without delay. If any of the justices at the sessions refuses or forbears to take the oaths, let the recipients inform the Chancellor and instruct the justice to leave office until he conforms and is newly commissioned. If any Justice does not respond to the summons to the sessions, let him be instructed to leave office until he takes the oaths, either in Chancery, or, upon giving a satisfactory explanation of his absence, in open sessions, from persons appointed by a writ of dedimus potestatem, and inform Chancery. Those failing to do this within twenty days after the sessions are to be removed from the commission of the peace. Because many are commonly in commission that are not resident in the county where they are named commissioners, let them be instructed to leave office until they are known to have taken oath in their county of residence or before the Chancellor. Some justices do not attend church or chapel or some other place where common prayer is used, and their wives living with their husbands and their sons, who live in the same house or the same county, are known to refuse to do so, contrary to the law and the vocation of those who ought to seek such offenders and reform them. Let all justices in the county be informed that any who do not attend church regularly, or whose wives living with them, or sons, over sixteen living in their father's house or in the same county, do not do so, as required by law, with the fathers knowing of their sons' recusance, should leave office, and be left out of the commission of peace during their recusance or that of their wives and sons. Let immediate notice be given thereof to

Clenennau Letters and Papers 65. vtls005593966 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), Hampton Court, to [persons selected by the Earl of Pembroke - see No. 66], 1593, Dec. 31. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Growing inconvenience is caused to the country by the children of gentlemen being sent overseas upon the pretext of learning languages, whereby they are generally brought up in the Popish religion and in 'corruptness of maners', to the detriment of the state. The Queen, wishing to right this significant disorder, has ordered enquiries to be made throughout the country as to what sons of gentlemen are at present overseas, having departed within the last seven years, and by what right they went. If any of them are sons of recusants or of men who conform only in order to avoid danger and the penalties of the law, their parents doubtless intended them to be brought up in Popery. Many become seminary priests, Jesuits and insincere subjects and are sent here to pervert the loyal and to disturb the Queen's rule. The recipients are chosen as loyal subjects to find what gentlemen in their county have at present sons, relatives or others for whose education or maintenance they are responsible, overseas upon the pretext of learning languages or for any other reason other than fighting in the Queen's service or in trade as apprentices to merchants. Let them send the Council catalogues of the names of such parents, tutors or patrons, and of those sent overseas, together with the whereabouts of the latter and the length of their absence. Let bonds be taken of money for the Queen's use from any parents or others who have sent anyone overseas, and who are known to be recusants or to have been ill-affected and only feignedly reformed, for their appearance before the Council on an appointed day. Before the bonds are taken, let their houses be searched by the recipients for Jesuits, seminary priests and other suspected persons, who should be committed to prison upon being found. Let their closets, chests, desks and coffer be searched for books, letters or writings against the state or the established religion, which should be seized and sent to the Council, with details of the recipients' proceedings, their opinions of the men and any incriminating evidence found, so that the Council may arrange the recall of their sons and kinsmen, and deal with any other charges against them. If the houses of any of those persons are far from the recipients, let the letter choose one or two discreet and loyal justices of the peace, who live more closely, and direct them to perform the search, using as a warrant a copy of the Council's letter under the recipient's seals. Let the recipients use their best and most urgent endeavours, and return certificates of the required information. Had hoped that William Morris would be here by last term. If William Morris does not send the money, will be forced either to go in person or to send his man to William Morris next week. Hopes to be saved this, because of the foulness of the way & the length of the journey. Postscript: John Langley's brother Rowland 'thinketh gret unkydnes' of William Morris for not sending the money for the cloth sent to him by Rowland, which should have been paid for at Michaelmas. Clenennau letters and papers 75. vtls005593977 ISYSARCHB54	File - Thomas Owen, London, to [his 1594/5, March 20. cousin] William Moris, esq., Clennau, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has received since his departure two letters from William Moris, both to the same effect and courteous far above his deserts. How can he, a poor gentleman, deserve that a man of William Moris's standing should make him head of so ancient a house and honour him with such a gracious living and a gentlewoman so fair and good. Can only be grateful and await the opportunity to show his thanks. Could he but match William Moris without harm to his estate, her person and William Moris's friendship would blindfold him to any consideration of wor[l]dly wealth. Since that is not the case, must take careful consideration both for his own sake and her good and that of William Moris. At the first conference, no offer made by his friends, however large, was accepted. It was broken off with the condition that if a second meeting were held in the country at midsummer, at the wish of William Moris and Thomas Owen's cousin, the previous offers should not be mentioned, but matters should be freshly debated through the mediation of friends. Feels himself wronged in William Moris's last letter, in which William Moris bids him be constant and refers to a former promise. Thomas Owen's liking for the lady is unchanged, and William Moris refused the previous offers. If the promise referred to is the one made by Thomas Owen before Mr Henry Lloyd, Mr David Roberts and others to be there at midsummer to

	settle the matter, Thomas Owen intends to be present, if William Moris is of the same mind. Will proceed no further in the matter, but refer it to the meeting; meanwhile leaves the disposition thereof to William Moris. The reason for Thomas Owen's delay in answering his cousin's letter and those of William Moris was that he intended to send Henry Hughes, the bearer of William Moris's letters, to confer with William Moris & in other business in Wales. Hughes said in a letter that he would return in less than a month and offers his services. Is still awaiting him and fears he has offended William Moris; is now obliged to send by other means, as he might have done originally. Hopes that William Moris will take no offence. Wrote to his cousin Elin; perhaps William Moris will be displeased. But it is Thomas Owen's way to look on the dark side; if a solution is found he cannot then be accused of ill dealing. Will not spare himself in the dear matter of his marriage. Hopes there is nothing in the letter at which William Moris may take exception. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 75. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Harry ap Ivan Lloyd will bring or send them; let William Moris, when he has finished with them, return them to John Roberts, with the present letter, for him to see their conceit. Request that John Roberts's letter to Mr Dr Ellis about some corn which the latter has to sell, be sent to William Moris's 'chamber wenn', and an answer obtained which John Roberts may receive when Gruffithe comes for the beef. Clenennau letters and papers 77.	File - The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Greenwich, to [Henry Herbert], E[arl] of Pembroke,	1595, June 14.

vtls005593980 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Are to inform Henry Herbert of the numbers of foot the Queen wishes to have levied in the counties of his lieutenancy, and of the procedure on other points relating to the same. The numbers to be levied in the counties, both in and outside the liberties, are 440, and they are to be provided with weapons and arms as follows:- half the number are to be shot (a quarter of that to be muskets), the other half to be armed with corslets and pikes, except for a few with halberds. They should have coats as soldiers should commonly have, blue in colour, of good cloth and lined. The exact numbers and the counties where they are to be levied are set down in an enclosed schedule. As soon as they are made ready, let them be sent to Chester in the charge of suitable persons to see them controlled on the way. Instead of conduct money, they shall have wages of 8d. a day from the time they are taken to their leader, until their arrival in Chester, marching at least sixteen miles a day, the money to be delivered beforehand at Henry Herbert's direction to the leader. The leader shall receive payment at Chester both for the coats, at the Queen's rate, and for the conduct to Chester. Henry Herbert is required to provide horsemen from the counties of Wiltshire and Somerset, and is to be informed of the proper procedure therein. Wiltshire must provide four and Somerset five. The horses must be good and carry a suitable man, armed with cuirass, headpiece, sleeves of mail, a light horseman's staff, pistol, sword and dagger. For the charges and provision of the same, let Henry Herbert, taking the advice of the chief men of the counties, cause contributions to be made to buy horses and provide horsemen. The men must have blue coats of good cloth. The contributions must be levied only among justices of the peace living in the counties, within and outside the liberties, who are sufficiently wealthy, as specified by the Queen's letters. It will doubtless be so light a task as to be accomplished willingly and quickly. Since the horsemen's numbers are small, no-one need be appointed to take them to Chester, whence they are to embark, but so that they may go there in orderly fashion, let it be found what horsemen are appointed from adjoining counties so that they may travel together. At Chester they shall be received into the Queen's pay and thence transported to Ireland to serve under captains appointed by the Lord Deputy. Since no definite period can be set for their journey to Chester because of the uncertainty within what time they may be provided, can only request all possible diligence, so that they may be at Chester by 1 July, or at the latest by 10 July. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Queen's forces in Ireland need to be strengthened. Not wishing to burden her subjects with the levying of greater numbers than can easily be spared, has set small numbers of foot to be levied in several counties, to be sent to Ireland as specified in a letter of the Privy Council [No. 77]. Request to have levied the numbers specified therein, and to see them equipped with coats, armour and weapons and taken to the coast to be transported to Ireland. The present letter is his authority. Clenennau letters and papers 80. vtls005593983 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Gwydir, to [William Maurice], 1595, June 23. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Encloses Nos 77-9. There is need for haste and the county is large; time would slip away in the arranging of a meeting. Has therefore decided upon a plan of action and informs William Maurice thereof so that he may act likewise, unless he finds some inconvenience in it, in which case he may follow the best course, and John Wynn will follow him, for he is unwilling to be directed in the performance of the Queen's service. The bearer can tell William Maurice anything omitted in this letter. Has appointed Monday June 30, for the holding of musters at Conwy for his limit, before himself and the justices of the peace. Four of every parish are to appear, and fifteen out of these to be chosen for the five commotes. Intends to arm them with county equipment as follows - seven armed pikes, three muskets and five calivers. Time does not permit holding a cess or a mise for the equipment - this may best be done at the assizes when they are all together and at leisure. Has sent to Chester for cloth for the liveries. William Maurice & John Wynn must provide £20 each to take the men to Chester and provide them with necessities; for sums in excess of that, credit must be used. Let William Maurice inform John Wynn by June 30 what day his men will be at Conwy, so that John Wynn's soldiers may travel with them. Will appoint one of his men, discreet and trustworthy, to lead his men; let William Maurice do likewise, for though the justices of the peace are jointly responsible, any discredit would fall on John Wynn and William Maurice alone. Because they live near Chester, their men must be there first. Adds William Maurice's name to his [John Wynn's] warrant; let William Maurice place John Wynn's on his. William Maurice must be responsible for his men, and John Wynn will do the same for his. Let William Maurice send a written promise to this effect. Postscript: They have many enemies. Let William Maurice see his underofficers do not bribe the county or William Maurice and John Wynn will be blamed. John Wynn's warrants are directed to the constables, in some places jointly with others of special trust. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 80. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Therefore many of them are compelled to wander and beg against the law and to the discouragement of others. Since in some counties

	contributions are gathered and few or none are relieved, the collections there might be converted to maintain those who cannot obtain allowances in their place of birth or where they were pressed. Enquire therefore, of every county what sums were collected there and how they were used. Request to Henry Herbert to send copies of their letters [No. 82] to the counties of his presidency with instructions to the sheriff and justices of the peace to certify the Council of the information required as soon as possible, so that the Council may order the relief of those who have not obtained it. In various counties where collections have been made, few or none have been sent to benefit therefrom, the money lies unused in the treasurers' hands. In many counties where soldiers were pressed or volunteered and are to be relieved, the collections are not sufficient reasonably to maintain the number of injured daily sent to them. These men therefore, according to the statute, should be helped with the surplus of money collected in other counties. Many, unable to find relief, where it should be given to them, wander and beg, against the law and the will of Queen and Parliament. Request that the justices of the peace and treasurers of Caernarfonshire certify the Council of the sums of money collected in the county under the statute since it was first put into execution, stating the number of parishes that contributed and the amounts each sent; also, if they were insufficient to relieve those sent to the county, how many were turned away and what signification was made of the reasons for not providing relief. Enquire re the last point since many injured soldiers sent with proper warrants according to the statute returned complaining that no attention was paid to them and that they were refused allowances and signification of the reasons for rejection; this must be changed. Both musters were held on the same day; did not think William Maurice would be more than a day behind, in which time John Wynn thought their uniforms would be ready. Blue cloth is being kept for William Maurice by John Wynn's friend Mr John Owen of Chester, to whom William Maurice should send money or letters of credit. Various companies are already at Chester, including some from the furthest counties of England, a disgrace to John Wynn & William Maurice. The Montgomeryshire men are already equipped and have gone to the coast, furnished by their lieutenants with coats, doublets, hose, shoes and caps. Thinks that his men and William Maurice's should be better equipped than they are, but that should be left to the leaders' discretion, when they have come together. Request to William Maurice to send his men as soon as possible. Let him send by their leader a signed bill containing the men's names to the mayor of

[William] Moris, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Regrets that William Moris was unable to be at the Assizes as he had intended. Is in urgent need of money, and William Moris promised by 'bartellmewtyd' to pay the rest of his debt and interest because of John Langley's forbearance. William Moris must pay the reminder, namely £8.0.12, before Bartholemew Fair, since John Langley is bound to pay a large sum and counted on William Moris's money. Earnest request to send it, or John Langley will be greatly inconvenienced and forced to send for it. Hopes he will be saved the long journey. William Moris writes that the total is less than John Langley wrote in his previous letter, as John Langley's note would show. After John Langley delivered the note, William Moris's man Hugh ap Ric[hard] had of him one and three quarter ells of soft taffeta and soft lace for the cape and three yards of tawny Billiment', which came to 8s.10. Added to the former bill it makes £8.0.12; with every penny William Moris has paid allowed for. These previous instructions are renewed throughout the realm by the Queen's command and the Council's letters. William Grosvenor of Bellaport, Shropshire, esq., since [15]88 has at great expense kept many men at work making a store of all kinds of equipment, armour and ammunition, and has had no 'yssue' thereof other than the equipping three of the first ten companies sent last March to Ireland. The equipment, etc., was found to be good and reasonably priced, but Mr Grosvenor is greatly hindered by having to keep the rest, a large amount being so long unsold. Let Henry Herbert direct his deputy lieutenants that careful musters be taken in Wales and the Marches, and the arms and equipment of those musters be examined. Let any defects therein be supplied by Mr Grosvenor, provided the equipment is suitable & reasonably priced, to the benefit of the county and the Queen's service, and as encouragement to Mr Grosvenor & like gentlemen in such undertakings. Continuing the beacon watches during the winter will be troublesome to the inhabitants of the counties under Henry Herbert's jurisdiction. Since there is no reason why they should not cease for some time, let Henry Herbert order them stopped until 1 March. If this is so, John Wynn and William Morise should immediately inform the Privy Council. If any suspicious accident happened in the county and the Council heard of it from elsewhere, John Wynn and William Morise would rightly be discredited. They must not report a 'flim flam tale' of hearsay; William Morise should enquire concerning the matter of the most trustworthy people on the coast and [if he finds it at all true,] the Council should be informed as soon as possible, and John Wynn will join in doing so. Has been commanded by the Queen's letters further to levy 100 able men in Carmarthenshire, fifty each in Denbighshire and Flintshire, and 416 in the other Welsh counties. Direction that these men be sent under the leadership of discreet persons chosen by Henry Herbert or the deputy lieutenants, to Chester by 1 April. With regard to equipping them with armour and weapons, let previous orders be observed, namely, that half the whole be shot, and a quarter of those muskets, and that the other half be armed with corslets and pikes except for a few with halberds. Let the men be furnished with coats of good cloth, well lined and blue in colour, and with the usual allowances of conduct money. At Chester allowances shall be made as usual to persons appointed by the counties to receive them, for the coats and conduct money. Because soldiers have fled from the captains after being levied, let a roll be made of the name and equipment of each soldier, signed by the deputy lieutenant of every county, and sent to the Lord Treasurer to be enrolled in Chancery, so that deserters may be duly punished. 	Queen's service. A certificate was required by the Council of the trained bands and of Henry Herbert's proceedings. The Council sees from letters and muster rolls received from Henry Herbert that he has taken views of the horse and foot and supplied the defects thereof, 'in some sorte'. But because of the great rainfall this winter, he has not had them often or sufficiently trained. Reminder that the present time of year is very convenient, both because of the weather and causing less hindrance to agriculture than in any other season, to have the county forces trained, first in such numbers as can most conveniently be assembled with least trouble to the county, then in greater numbers to be properly instructed: the shot should be taught to discharge their pieces quickly and well, the pikemen to use their weapons properly, to know their officers, to march, and the other skills of trained soldiers, so that they are in proper and necessary readiness to be used when required, to repulse any enemy attempt or otherwise to defend the country in the Queen's service. There are defects in the certificates of musters for various counties sent by Henry Herbert (as in those of other counties); some counties in Henry Herbert's lieutenancy have made no certificate at all. The Council has therefore had printed a general form of certificate, and send Henry Herbert a copy for him to follow, so that there may be a uniform order in all the certificates. Request for Henry Herbert to send by 31 May complete muster rolls of the county forces of both horse and foot, according to the said form, after he has trained them, and to certify the Council how he has seen to supplying the defects in previous certificates. Request for special diligence. 'Post Script': Let the soldiers sent by clergy in the counties of Henry Herbert's lieutenancy not be further mustered and trained with the rest of the county forces because they will soon be used in the Queen's service. The letters were sent to William Maurice by the bishop of Bangor to be executed in his absence. If the clergy had the horses and equipment ready (which they do not), they have no men to fight, nor do they or any others have authority to press men. 	Receipt of No. 104 and reference to its contents. Answers without conferring with William Maurice because of the need for haste and the distance between their dwellings. Had William Meirick sent a copy of the Queen's mandate and the Archbishop of Canterbury's letters, as is customary, the Queen's meaning could have been established on the particular point specified, even if it were not fully set out. But, answering without seeing them, John Wynn is not aware of any authority of the deputy lieutenants to press men to serve for the clergy. However, if, after examination of the letters and a conference with William Maurice, William Meirick, and the Justices of the Peace to be held at Conwy on 26 March, it should then be thought right that men be pressed, John Wynn is ready in this and all other matters to serve the Queen. Sends by his servant, Capt. Roger Billinges, letters of the Privy Council to Henry Herbert concerning a levy to be made of soldiers to serve under the Earl of Essex, the Lord Admiral, the equipment and 'conduction' of which soldiers is left to voluntary contributions. This should cause the recipients to give the more generously since it will come only from their eagerness to advance any plan undertaken for the Queen and the safety of the country. Payments made upon command are regarded as their duty. Needs not say that the journey of these forces is for the Queen and the country since this is obvious from the honour of the generals who undertake it and bear most of its expenses, and from the Queen's commission and the Council's letters. If these noble men risk themselves and their possessions in such an honourable action, the recipients would incur shame by being less generous. If they are liberal, the generals and the Queen (who will be informed of each man's contribution) will look kindly upon them; if this letter should cause them to contribute more freely, Henry Herbert also will be beholden to them, since they prove their loyalty and enable him to demonstrate his furthering of this action. Prays for success for the venture & the noblemen, to whom he wishes honour. Is writing this letter to those who are able to contribute to this service - they have always been forward in 'comorthas' on their own behalf; believes therefore they will be much more so in this 'comortha' for the public good. The bishop of Bangor has not been here since John Owen came, if he were, it would be useless to ask him for an administration - no man can or will make more of such things than his lordship. Since the new Lord Keeper was made, Mr Jones wrote a letter in William Morice's name to Lord Warwick concerning William Morice's Custos Rotulorum. John Owen, having just arrived in London can[not] tell the result thereof & will wait for developments before taking action. Mr John Roberts has come; John Owen will let him have £100. Mr William Roberts deals unkindly with John Owen; he keeps John Owen there waiting to settle the matter, which John Owen must do before he comes home, because [William Roberts] goes overseas. Had it not been for this trouble, John Owen would have been home by Whitsun, for he longs to see his wife. Wishes that the reason which William Morice suggests were the cause of her longing and the losing of her stomach, but fears it is the sickness which troubled her as a maid. If so, immediate remedy must be had for her this summer, otherwise the continual issue and losing of blood will cause dropsy. But has some hope of the other for he knows his aunt Anne is experienced in these matters. Commits to God William Morice, Mr B., Mrs Anne, his wife and his friends. Meanwhile, will do his best to provide money for next term. Hopes he will not be behind with what he should have. Meanwhile hopes to find William Morice reasonable, since he has committed things to him. Little expected such hard measure and unreasonable conditions. If it continues, his own cousin is greatly to be blamed. Confesses himself deceived in his conceit of William Morice's kindness. Has reason to complain of Mr Brinkir, who promised kindness not performed. Postscript: The time is bad for obtaining money. An alderman's bond is taken for only £100. John Owen stayed at Lyn so long to pacify a brawl between the Queen's officers of the Custom House and the mayor. Had he [not] come to Lynn then much inconvenience would have ensued. Now all friends. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 112.

Clenennau letters and papers 113. vtls005594016 ISYSARCHB54	File - [Henry Herbert, Earl of] Pembroke, Tickenhill, to the deputy lieutenants and justices of the peace for Caernarfonshire,	1596, July 22.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has learned from the deputy lieutenants' certificates and the information of others of faults in the county which he is surprised have been tolerated for so long; desires them to be swiftly put right. 1. Various men have not provided martial equipment as they were assessed. Encloses the note sent to him by the deputy lieutenants. Let the men be commanded to fulfil their duty; if they refuse or delay, let them be bound to appear before Henry Herbert to answer therefore. 2. In various counties, men assessed to provide corslets, muskets or calivers, instead of buying their own, borrow their neighbours' and friends' at times of muster. Thereby the Queen is deceived, the lieutenants are abused and their certificates are falsified; in an emergency the whole state could be endangered. Requires the muster master to stamp all arms with one stamp for the county and another for the band. This will require effort and expense of the muster master but will benefit the country who should therefore recompense him. Leaves them to decide the amount - wishes to be informed thereof. 3. When the shot are trained, private soldiers have to pay for their own powder. This is a heavy burden and discourages them. Let a general levy be made for powder and match for training, to be distributed to them when they train, in such quantities as the deputy lieutenants and muster master advise. 4. Trained soldiers are not being chosen according to the instructions of the Queen and Council. Only householders or their sons, of suitable age and fitness, should be enrolled and trained; but recipients accept their sons in their places. This lowers the status of the service and the frequent changing of the servants' dwellings causes hindrance. Let them see this put right. 5. The muster master is not paid his full year's wage of £30. Is very displeased and wishes immediate remedy to be made. It is against all reason that while doing his duty as the deputy lieutenants have acknowledged, he should not be paid. Let the deputy lieutenants receive from him the names of those who have not paid him, and see him satisfied, or them punished. Request for careful execution of the above. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 113. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Queen has commanded Henry Herbert to levy 1,000 foot in the counties of Wales to be sent to Ireland; the Council to direct from which counties to levy them. Enclose a schedule of the numbers for each county except Anglesey. If the charge is too great on some and others could bear an increase, leave it to Henry Herbert to take the advice of those who know the wealth and ability of the counties and to alter them. The whole number is to be 1,000, except for six from every hundred for 'dead Payes', making 940. Ten chosen captains will be sent by the Council to conduct the troops, whose names are in the schedule; let them be appointed to the counties where they are most acceptable by birth and friendship, each to take charge of a band of 94 for whom each captain shall have impressed a month's wages for him and his officers and a week's wages for the soldiers to take them to the coast. The customary Queen's allowance of 4s. a man is delivered to Henry Herbert's servant Arthure Messenger to be paid to the county towards the cost of the coats. As for armour and weapons, half should be shot and the rest pikes armed with corslets; of the shot half should be muskets. The colour of their coats, as long as they are of good cloth and well lined, is left to Henry Herbert and his lieutenants. For the expedition of the service, let them be ready by 31 Oct., and at the coast by 8 Nov., the companies of North Wales to embark from Chester and those of South Wales from Bristol. Clenennau letters and papers 128. vtls005594033 ISYSARCHB54	File - George Salusbury, Denbigh, to 1597, May 29. William Morris, esq., one of the lieutenants for Caernarfonshire, Clenennau, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Understands from William Morris's letter that he [William Morris] postponed the view of trained soldiers and their armour in his limit partly because of some business of his own and partly because of their not being provided with the necessary equipment, which reasons George Salusbury has hitherto allowed; but now begs William Morris for both their sakes to grant out warrants so that there may be a good appearance of all the trained bands, one part at Llanllyfni on 20 June and the other at Pwllheli on 29 June. Let them bring with them sufficient match and powder to train and muster for two days, and money to pay for marking and stamping their armour. This is the more urgent because George Salusbury heard recently in London that there are [...] appointed through the realm to take view of all the trained soldiers and their equipment, because it is uncertain when they will be employed. George Salusbury would be sorry if the Lord Lieutenant should have cause to criticise any endeavour of his in respect of the county's negligence in performing their duties; the fault will not be theirs but first William Morris and then of George Salusbury. Therefore wishes the greater regard to be had hereof; those in the hither part of the shire grudge that they are called twice or three times and hindered in this busy time and William Morris's upper part is not yet called at all. It would be easy and profitable for George Salusbury to take his pension and not trouble the [...] or William Morris at all if he might be so excused and discharge the trust reposed in him. But by God's grace will either discharge his office as is fitting or inform the Lord Lieutenant where the fault lies; knows William Morris will approve. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 128. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 129. vtls005594034 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Gwydir, to [William Maurice, ?Bryncir], 1597, June 26. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Received William Maurice's letter and John Williams the prisoner's petition to William Maurice. Has considered the Council's letters [No. 127a] and finds they refer to those who have hitherto returned from the Queen's service in Ireland as well as those who do so in future; therefore finds John Williams Nt 'bayleable' by William Maurice or John Wynn until they hear from the Privy Council. Showed John Williams all courtesy at the latter's appearance before him for having examined his passport, told him it was insufficient discharge, showing him the commission, requesting a copy of the passport and John Williams's submission to the Lord Lieutenant or Privy Council and promising to send them without bias; but John Williams refused, saying that John Wynn had no authority since he [John Williams] was an officer and would come out shortly whether John Wynn wished it or not. Thereupon John Wynn was obliged to commit him. Since then John Williams appealed to William Maurice, William Maurice must hear his case. If it be found that he should be freed and that John Wynn wronged him, John Wynn will make satisfaction; if otherwise John Williams must do so to John Wynn's authority. Is willing to join with William Maurice at the assizes in asking for John Williams's release, in such a manner as the judges think William Maurice and John Wynn may act within their authority. Although John Williams makes John Wynn his oppressor in his petition, John Wynn believes an impartial observer would believe that John Wynn took only necessary and proper action. William Maurice does nothing without John Wynn's knowledge; John Wynn will act likewise. Returns John Williams's petition for William Maurice to answer according to this letter. Let William Maurice get a copy of the passport and send it to John Wynn. As far as John Wynn remembers from his first reading of it, believes John Williams was to return to his former place; he did not do this for almost two years without any sickness or other cause being known to his neighbours. The Queen is informed that a Spanish fleet has been seen off the coast of England; it is uncertain whether they are heading towards this country or Ireland. She has therefore given authority and commission to the Earl of Essex who has arrived at Plymouth with the navy that accompanied him on his recent voyage, to follow the Spanish fleet, fight it by sea or land and repulse it. The Earl should be assisted with a further number of men the better to withstand the enemy's attempts and to frustrate their purposes, and has authority to demand of Henry Herbert further aid and supplies of men from the Welsh counties such as he thinks necessary. Request Henry Herbert as Lord Lieutenant of Wales to have such numbers of able and choice men in the Welsh counties as by former directions were appointed to serve in Ireland, made ready to be sent without delay upon direction from the Earl of Essex under the conduct of some suitable person to the nearest place of embarkation; let Henry Herbert see them furnished with armour, weapons and other equipment and provided with food. Upon being certified by Henry Herbert of the extraordinary charge for levying, conducting and victualling the forces, the Council will see made the customary allowances for such services. Considering therefore the difficult time and the necessity that these services be expedited by all means, request Henry Herbert to do his utmost to see the Earl furnished according to his directions with the best forces, and to certify the Council of their numbers, equipment, port of embarkation and leaders. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 133. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location:

Encloses the charges and how they stand. 1. Touching Sir Henry Bagnall's action against William Maurice, Mr Brynkyr and Mr Lewys, they were outlawed before Thomas Martyn heard, but procured the attorney to take a [] and have time to answer until next term. Let William Maurice send instructions. 2. As for the suit of Mr Leonard Baker and Mr Thomas Adrewe against William Maurice and Mr Brynkyr, returnable this term, was forced to plead a delay until next term. Then William Maurice may have the actions confessed to save charges and a stay of process until the Easter term, and William Maurice and Mr Brynkyr can take no harm until next Michaelmas term. 3. In Edwards's recovery against William Maurice the outlawry in the Common Pleas is discharged and satisfaction acknowledged. Mr William Thomas must plead the pardon and have satisfaction acknowledged for him next term if he wishes. 4. Thomas Bankes the hosier had sued William Maurice to an outlawry for £40; that is also reversed and deferred until next term. 5. Leonard Baker and Thomas Andrewe had sued William Maurice and Mr Brynkyr to an outlawry last Easter term. That was reversed for them both and next term they may declare if they will for bail is put in Court for them both. 6. Eva verch Meredith by Mr Blodwell had got a judgment entered against William Maurice for £300 but by Thomas Martyn's labour thinks she and Mr Blodwell will lose their charge and begin again if they 'list', for they will lose the suit in the Common Pleas and the King's Bench. 7. The outlawry after judgment against them at Sir Richard Bulkeley's suit was not discharged in Mr Antrobus's book but upon a search being made of the accounts, Thomas Martyn had a note delaying the process of outlawry and next term William Maurice may have satisfaction entered and the pardon pleaded and discharged for about four nobles. 	Though they have been slow to answer Henry Herbert's letter of 14 Nov., have not failed to note his diligence in making ready the 1,000 men who were to be sent from the Welsh counties to the Earl of Essex after his recent return from the voyage of the islands and in providing food for them according to the directions in the Council's letter [No. 133]. If Henry Herbert found the instructions less detailed than usual, this was because after the order was given for the number of men and the provision of food, more particular directions were referred to the Earl, the Queen's general, as he, being in the West country should find cause; Henry Herbert would have received such orders from him, had there been need to use the men. If Henry Herbert has not yet discharged the men (as Essex supposes he has done), let him do so forthwith, but in such a way that they may be ready upon short notice if required again. Thought that Henry Herbert had seen to disposing of the food which they since understand from his letter remains there; let him see it sold, and either repayment made to those who supplied money or food for the provisions, or the money from the sale put in the care of a suitable person for use in the Queen's service upon a similar occasion; Henry Herbert may follow whichever course he thinks best & most agreeable to the county. Henry Herbert levied some men from Anglesey, although it has been exempted from any levy by the Council, but since Henry Herbert was unaware of this from their letters and the occasion was extraordinary, cannot blame his proceeding. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 136. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The Council has seen to receiving them there, to their transport, food and their lodging while they wait to embark, and to the payment of the county's costs for their coats (at the Queen's usual allowance of 4s. a coat) and for their conduct money according to the rate specified. Let Henry Herbert see to the immediate performance thereof, and have tripartite rolls made of the soldiers and their arms and equipment, sending one roll for each county to the Council, keeping another and giving the third to the leader. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Wyllyam Morrys's short letter gave him long cause for thought in respect of three items, firstly, that Wyllyam Morrys's bargain for the meadow was 'upon your lykinge or levinge'; if this was so why did Wyllyam Morrys agree with Sir Henry in writing to pay him £80 on a certain day and why did he pay interest from Christmas to Easter therfor if the bargain was conditional upon his choice. Cannot remember any other than an absolute bargain, which he earnestly wishes were already performed for the continuation of friendship between Wyllyam Morrys and Sir Henry. Wyllyam Morrys also said that he 'rydd all things' at Quarrington, which Anthony Trappes cannot understand. Wishes to know his mistake in the rent demanded; Wyllyam Morrys has enjoyed it for the three years up to Our Lady Day in Lent last past, paying only £6 rent, which was paid at Quarrington as follows, £4 which Wyllyam Morrys gave to Anthony Trappes before Anthony Trappes went to England and 40s. at Quarrington. How can it be that there is not two years' rent owing? If Wyllyam Morrys had paid the £80 at the appointed time, the year's rent would have been his, and will be if he now does so. Begs Wyllyam Morrys, if he means to have anything from Sir Henry, or wishes Anthony Trappes to work for him, to send the rent on Monday next, or Anthony Trappes will not act on his behalf, for he dare not where Sir Henry is offended. Has sent warrants throughout his limit for the sheriff, the justices of the peace, their peers and the freeholders 'of the better sorte' to be at Caernarvon on Tuesday week to discuss the service and has fixed a general muster on the Wednesday for Isgwyrfae and on the Friday at Conwy for the other four commotes. Has written to Sir Richard Trevor that the men will be ready a fortnight on Monday, promising more precise information after consulting William Maurice. Wishes William Maurice to take similar action in his limit. Has instructed John Owen to provide coats and equipment for 23 more, for he has all ready for 24. 'You see the care ys all layed on our backes and the Justices of the peace are exempt who will laghe in ther sleeves at us and give us litle or no furtherance. Supposed that the men of William Maurice's limit would also be there by then, to be sent forth and handed over to the leader on Saturday 15 July. If William Maurice thinks he can be ready by then, let him send word soon so that John Wynn as he promised may warn Sir Richard

	Trevor to be there on Friday night. Does not feel he can draw his end of the county to Caernarvon 'being so roughe wayes and so farre off'. The men must be handed over at Conwy, so 40 miles' travel will be saved for the county and William Maurice may be there to watch what is done; John Wynn's health does not permit him to travel to the upper county. Thinks William Maurice would be harsh to draw all his limit to Caernarvon, and would only hinder himself, for he could not do it all in one day, and then the county 'will shipp awaie and stay noe longer for you. Remember howe they served you at Cales voyage'. Thinks it would be better for William Maurice to muster the three commotes of Llyn at Pwllhelli on Monday 15 July and come to Caernarvon that night or early next morning. There he could summon Eifionydd and Uwchgwyrfai to be mustered on Wednesday, when John Wynn musters Isgwyrfai. On Thursday, John Wynn, William Maurice and their men could go to Conwy, muster the rest on Friday and hand them over on Saturday. John Wynn's coats and equipment will be ready at Conwy on Thursday night; so should be those for William Maurice's limit, so that they receive no more 'cheking' letters that they lend their men 'like Roges'. John Wynn will advise William Maurice as best he can but will not interfere with his limit or alter the partition of the limits. Has Henry Herbert's letter allowing their division of limits; William Maurice and John Wynn shall not answer for each other's defects. In John Wynn's limit men run away to other counties when musters are rumoured; to prevent this John Wynn has sent the constables to press fugitives in every commote. Deals with those men likely to run away with the press money as they are dealt with in London, i.e. placed in Bridewell or Leadenhall. Those who cannot give sureties for their appearance are committed to the castle; commends the same course to William Maurice. Postscript: William Maurice suggested the Quarter Sessions for their conference, but sufficient warning could not have been given. Only those who had business there would be present, and they would be few at this time of year. Also John Wynn's health would not allow of two journeys so close together. Let William Maurice bear with him with regard to travel, for the way is rough, unpleasant and long and John Wynn is sickly. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 145. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Mr Sweenerton refused, saying that he did not have his 'writings' and would receive his money only from William Moris or his assign; also that he knew William Moris did not intend to redeem it at present because of some 'jarres' between William Moris and Mr Owen. Rodderick Powell gathered that Mr Sweenerton expected William Moris to forfeit the estate and spoke about this to his cousin Mr Owen on the latter's arrival in London. Mr Owen said the money was ready to redeem the land but he would not do so until the last day since William Moris would not settle with him with regard to that and other matters between them. Recounted to Rodderick Powell past unkindness of William Moris when Mr Owen had acted on his behalf, and said he was informed from the country that William Moris did not intend to settle with him. Gathers from this and other things which he heard in the country that William Moris hinders himself and Mr Owen in not coming to a settlement. Clenennau letters and papers 148/2. vtls005594055 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), at the 1599, May 9. Court at Greenwich, to [Henry Herbert], Earl of Pembroke, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: All enemy attempts have been so far frustrated, the best way to maintain this peace, both in the country and outside (next to keeping the people to the true Christian religion) is to maintain their strength with arms and weapons for their defence and to attack the enemy. To this end, the Queen and Council for many years past have authorised certain persons, among them the Queen's lieutenants and commissioners, to assemble and levy her subjects, to arm and muster them, both horsemen and footmen, and therewith to defend the realm against all rebels and enemies. Instructions have previously been given to the lieutenants and commissioners, but since then, musters and arming of trained soldiers, both horsemen and footmen, has lapsed. These must be renewed, both for the defence of the realm and because it is not right while the enemy continues his preparations to cease from necessary precautions to defend the country. Let Henry Herbert have reviewed the forces recently mustered, armed and put into bands under captains in the counties and see them supplied with men where they are wanting. Then let him have taken a general view and muster of these forces, both horse and foot, and see them trained in their divisions and in those places, chosen by Henry Herbert or the deputy lieutenants, which will be least inconvenient to the county. They should be trained according to further instructions by muster masters or other suitable persons. Henry Herbert should return to the Council by 20 June a certificate of the musters, using the usual form, so that all the certificates may be uniform. In some counties the certificate is sent late and in some not at all; since the Queen has no accurate record, ask Henry Herbert not to fail to order the muster and training so that a certificate may be made by the appointed day. Reference to past instructions, which Henry Herbert will no doubt observe, but because it is better to be in readiness

	beforehand rather than make provision in the confusion of a sudden demand, remind Henry Herbert of the need to have ready, so that nothing may be wanting, provisions of powder, match and bullets, to be stored and examined for decay, petronells, which the justices were appointed to provide, carriages, nags, [...] and other necessities ordered in special letters to the maritime counties and Ireland, for the defence of the coast, and for supplying and succouring each other. Hear there is no provision in many counties. If Henry Herbert cannot certify the musters immediately, let him send word of the stores in the counties and supply any lack therein. Do not doubt that Henry Herbert will be diligent in this. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 148/2. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 148a. vtls005594056 ISYSARCHB54	File - Instructions For The Muster 1599, May 9. Masters. Given at the Court at Greenwich, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Two points are referred to the muster masters: the sorting of the arms and the method of training. As to the first, a company should be equally made up of armed men and shot, the armed men to be all pikes except the officers, and the shot to be at least half, or if possible two thirds, muskets, and the rest arquebuses. Care should be taken what men are put in each kind of arms, the strongest and best to be pikes, the strongest and squarest to carry muskets and the smallest and nimblest turned to the arquebuses. Above all should be considered a man's aptitude to use the arms; the muster master might see the same men using several arms before assigning them to one kind. The method of training should be that quickest and most easily learned, and most useful for all types of service. Each company should be divided into three squadrons, each squadron into as many files as the number will bear, and each file into fellowship. The chief file of the squadron should be led by the corporal, the second by his deputy and the rest by the best men of each squadron. The company, thus divided, must be taught three things, - 1) to carry and use arms, 2) marching and motions and 3) understanding and obeying directions of the drum or voice. (1) Arms should be carried smartly and ready for use. Pikes are used in making or receiving a charge. In the first, the soldier learns to withstand horse, in the second, to meet the enemies' pikes, where the skill is in knowing when and how each man and rank should push. In the teaching of the use of shot, the soldier must learn how to present his piece, take his level and how and when to fire his volley with the rest of his rank. This is the sergeants' task; they should teach the shot to use their arms and lead them unless a superior officer is appointed. The old method of firing volleys, namely, that all the shot in one battalion fire simultaneously, is to be condemned, for those behind either risk shooting their companion through the head or overshoot and waste their shot, and the volley once given, the enemy advances without hindrance. Instead of this kind of volley, which only, 'serves to make a great Crack', the first rank only should fire its volley, and then, if the battalion is marching, stand, so that the second rank passes through to shoot its volley, then the third and following ranks similarly. If the battalion is stationary, the first rank should fire, then fall back, to be replaced by the second then the third and so on. Thus the volley is continuous and the enemy never free from hindrance. This is easily done if the shot open their files. (2) In the teaching of marching, when every man knows his place and can observe his file and rank in a plain march there is no difficulty in this or in cantermarching, if the leaders of the files are well chosen and each man watches the one before him. If there is any disorder, the officers, watching and each being in his place, can easily right it. The places of the officers are as follows, the captain at the head of the troop and the lieutenant in the rear, except in a retreat, when the captain should be in the rear and the lieutenant at the head, and the sergeants on both sides going up and down to see the soldiers keep their rank. Teaching motions is added to the teaching of marching for there are many such involving no marching or changing place, only turning to the right, the left or around. This is necessary should the enemy charge on either side or from behind. Other motions involve changing place from one rank to another when some move and others stand still. Such motions are doubling ranks or files in order to make the flanks or fronts greater or smaller according to the enemy and the ground. Another motion to be taught involves the movement of all but no marching, namely opening and closing files, which is of use for one rank to pass through another, in counter-marching, or to draw the troop quickly to move one way

	or another. (3) The soldiers, being taught to know the sound of the drums, must observe not only what the drummer does but what time he keeps for they should march more slowly or quickly accordingly. Taught to march by the drum, so by the voice he is taught other motions. It is best to accustom him to one word which once learned will serve as a direction. The following were used in training the Queen's army at Plymouth [list given]. For most of these words no better can be chosen, but the choice of words is not so important as their constant use; yet the same words should be used generally throughout the troops, or even throughout the army, or it will cause confusion. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 148a. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 152. vtls005594060 ISYSARCHB54	File - Elizabeth I, at the manor of 1600, Jan. 3. Richmond, to her cousin [Henry Herbert, Earl of Pembroke], Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has always shown 'a princely care' for her subjects' good in levying men for service in Ireland; need not say she is unwilling to burden them further than is necessitated by the defence of her honour and the preservation of the kingdom, to suppress the rebellion. Has decided to have numbers levied from certain counties and from Wales, and put ready for service; request to Henry Herbert at the receipt hereof to have levied 1,750 able men as specified below [see list appended]. Let them be mustered and allotted arms as directed by the Privy Council. Henry Herbert will receive directions by the Privy Council when to hand them over to captains and leaders named by the Council who will conduct them to the [port] of embarkation, and of the cost of coats, conduct, transportation and other necessities. The men sent over to Ireland recently have been ill-chosen for their able bodies and aptness to serve and ill equipped; this neglect and carelessness might well have been a cause of so many disasters. Charges Henry Herbert now and in future to take care in the choice of men sent over so that this may be prevented and Henry Herbert be less burdened. The faults of some of those under Henry Herbert have hitherto been overlooked and various people left unpunished because of other important matters occupying the Council. But since it has caused such ill-effects as danger to the kingdom and dishonour to the nation, will henceforth 'have a more straight eye unto yt', and mete out appropriate punishment for each offence. Appended is a list of numbers of men to be levied from the counties: 50 From Cardiganshire, Flintshire, Merionethshire and Radnorshire; 100 from Glamorgan, Carmarthenshire, Breconshire, Caernarfonshire, Denbighshire and Montgomeryshire and 150 from Monmouthshire and Pembrokeshire, Somerset, Wiltshire, Shropshire and Worcestershire. Clenennau letters and papers 153. vtls005594061 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), at the 1599/1600, Jan. 5. Court at Richmond, to [Henry Herbert, Earl of PEMBROKE]. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Refer to No. 152. Enclose further directions for the performance thereof. Repeat the injunction to select suitable men because of the default hitherto and the hindrance thereby caused (failure cannot be imputed to anything more than poor choice and negligent sending forth of unsuitable men). It is found necessary from experience to change the type of arms hitherto prescribed. In a hundred there should be 20 pikes with corslets, pouldrons and morions, 10 halberds armed likewise and 12 muskets, 12 bastard muskets and 4[0] calivers, all with morions; they should be provided with swords and daggers. Care should be taken in providing the weapons. There remain six in every hundred or three in every fifty, who should be provided with wooden targets and other arms. Where targets are not available in the county, let money be sent to the port of embarkation for the provision thereof and of other arms at a rate of 5 nobles a man.

	The men should likewise be equipped with coats of strong cloth, well lined, and provided with conduct money to Bristol or Chester as appointed at a rate of 8d. a day for the soldiers and 6s. a day for the leaders, for the time of their journey to the port, where they should be without fail by 30 Jan. They should be conducted safely and in orderly fashion, by suitable persons from each county, to the port. There the Council will see to receiving them, to their transportation and food, and to their lodging whilst they await embarkation. The counties will be repaid for the coats at the usual allowance, and for the conduct money. Upon a certificate of the charges being sent to the Lord Treasurer, swift repayment will be made to any person appointed for the receipt thereof. Request for speedy performance. Let tripartite rolls be made for each county in the usual manner of the numbers of soldiers (which should be complete) and of their arms and equipment, one to be sent to the Council, the second kept by Henry Herbert and the third given to the conductor. Appended is a list of numbers of men to be levied from each county as in No. 152, with ports of embarkation as follows: Glamorgan, Monmouthshire, Carmarthenshire, Breconshire, Pembrokeshire, Somerset, Wiltshire and Worcestershire from Bristol, and Anglesey, Caernarfonshire, Cardiganshire, Flintshire, Denbighshire, Montgomeryshire, Merionethshire, Radnorshire and Shropshire from Chester, both adding 'to be there by the last of January'. A 'streight' command was given to Henry Herbert that the men should be chosen carefully, and special directions were given to the mayors of Chester and Bristol and the other gentlemen chosen to assist them with the help of the leaders charged with bringing the soldiers to the port. But disorder has grown amongst them - they have often been ready to mutiny, and various of them have run away, some taking their whole suit of apparel. Generally the choice of men from the Welsh counties was so bad that they seemed to be chosen to unburden the counties of so many 'vagrant, idle and lewde persons', rather than for their ability and aptness to serve. Could not write more earnestly than they did to have this fault avoided, since it defrauds the counties of their charge and is very prejudicial to the Queen's service; until more care is used, no success can be expected from such weak and unfit persons. Inform Henry Herbert, to their grief, how offensive it is to the Queen to see this lack of care and neglect; it breeds discouragement in those for whose assistance they should be used and [gives an] advantage to the enemy. The Queen commands Henry Herbert to find by whose default this has happened and to certify the Council, so that they may receive appropriate punishment. In order that the soldiers who ran away may also be duly punished, send Henry Herbert a list received from the mayors of Chester and Bristol, of those who escaped that were levied in the counties of Henry Herbert's lieutenancy; let him give 'streight commandment' to the deputy lieutenants that if any of these comes to any of these counties, they may be caught and committed to gaol without bail, to receive the severe and exemplary punishment proper for their offences. Request for careful performance. Appended is a note of examination by John Wynn. 162A. [1599/1600, March 16]. List Of Escaped Soldiers referred to in No. 162, for Caernarfonshire. Clenennau letters and papers 163. vtls005594072 ISYSARCHB54	File - [Henry Herbert, Earl of] Pembroke, Wilton, to his friends the deputy lieutenants of Caernarfonshire,	1600, March 27.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Reminds the deputy lieutenants how earnestly he bade them in his last letters to take care to choose good men for the recent service in Ireland. It appears from the enclosed copy of the Council's letters (No. 162) what little attention has been paid to the service. Let them quickly inform Henry Herbert where the blame lies; if they delay, he must assume it lies with them, and they must expect to hear about it again in an unpleasant manner. Let them see the fugitives apprehended and imprisoned until they hear further. Requests any money unpaid by Caernarfonshire for arms and apparel to be quickly satisfied for Henry Herbert does not wish them to be called to answer for their slackness elsewhere; the fault is great if it has not been levied and no less if it is levied and unpaid. Let them regard this as a matter of their credit. Appended is a note of examination by John Wynn. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 163. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 164. vtls005594073 ISYSARCHB54	File - Edmonde Nicholson, 'Mr Winne his howse at Gwythor', to William Morris, esq., deputy lieutenant of the south part of Caernarfonshire ...,	1600, April 2.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Introduces himself. Has been with 'Mr Winne', deputy lieutenant for the north part of the county, who has settled his account for the 50 men levied in his circuit of the county, and given Edmonde Nicholson a certificate for the coat and conduct money so that he may receive it from the Exchequer. Encloses a copy of the letters sent by the Council to the Lord Lieutenant [?No. 162]; there is obviously negligence somewhere. Let William Morris send immediately to the mayor of Chester so that he may have settled William Morris's account for the £175 for arms and apparel and certify the Council thereof; William Morris is the last man 'behind unpaid'. Let him also send the mayor a certificate for what he deducts for the coat and conduct money, giving details of the number of days' marching, the starting place and the number of miles so that the Council may not object as they have with some who certify indefinitely. If William Morris sends the rest of the money to the mayor, with whom he has left only £135, and the certificate for the coat and conduct money, so that Edmonde Nicholson may have it settled there by Saturday night, will save William Morris further trouble, for intends to leave for the Court at daybreak on Monday. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 164. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 165. vtls005594074 ISYSARCHB54	File - Elizabeth I, at the manor of Nonesuch, to her cousin [Henry Herbert, Earl of PEMBROKE.],	1600, Aug. 1.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:

	Wishes to end the rebellion in Ireland, which has both spoiled the lives and fortunes of her subjects there and been a trouble and expense to the people of England. Has now decided to send over reinforcements to the army, which cannot otherwise maintain its strength. Is loth however to burden the people, and will ease them in so far as to bear the costs of this levy, namely for arms, apparel and other necessities. Authorises Henry Herbert to levy men in the Welsh counties, as specified in the list below, and to have them taken to the ports of Chester and Bristol as directed by the Privy Council, to be there, ready to embark, by 22 Aug. There, they are to be well equipped and transported according to the Privy Council's orders, which she requests Henry Herbert to observe. Appended is the list of numbers of men required from the counties, namely, 50 from Cardiganshire, Monmouthshire, Flintshire, Anglesey and Merionethshire and 100 from Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire, Glamorgan, Breconshire, Radnorshire, Montgomeryshire, Denbighshire and Caernarfonshire. Clenennau letters and papers 165a. vtls005594075 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Nonesuch, to [Henry Herbert,] E[arl] of Pembroke, 1600, Aug. 6. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The garrison at Loughfoyle needs to be reinforced with 800 men before the winter, and forces are also required to fill the bands in Munster. Because of the proximity of the Welsh counties to the ports of Bristol and Chester, the Queen has requested numbers of men from the counties of Henry Herbert's lieutenancy, as specified in the attached schedule, to be equipped and armed at the Queen's cost. The levy of men will cost little or nothing to the county; let Henry Herbert therefore give the deputy lieutenants careful directions to choose men who are able and fit to serve; they should be sent by leaders chosen in the counties to the ports of Bristol and Chester as directed in the schedule by 22 Aug. An allowance of 4s. a day for the length of the march will be made for the leading of the men to the port. Suitable ships are ready in Chester to transport those levied in North Wales to Lough Foyle in northern Ireland, and in Bristol to take the 600 from South Wales to Cork in Munster. Upon embarkation each man will receive a winter suit consisting of a coat of good broad cloth or an Irish mantle, a doublet, hose, stockings, shoes, a shirt and a hat. They shall be equipped with arms in Ireland, so Henry Herbert's responsibility is only to see them well chosen, 'sett forth in order like men', and equipped with good swords. An allowance of 8d. a day should be given to each man for the march to defray their expenses. This, and the allowance to the conductors, will be repaid to those appointed to receive it. At the ports, the men should be handed over to the mayors of Chester and Bristol, and the rest of the commissioners, with a roll signed by the deputy lieutenants and conductors, giving the full name and parish of each recruit. They should then be viewed according to the roll and consigned to captains appointed at their coming to Court to take charge of them and see them transported to Lough Foyle, Cork and Munster as specified in the schedule. There is small cost to the counties in this levy; this is wholly some by the Queen from her wish to ease them. Let Henry Herbert therefore give 'streight commandment' to the deputy lieutenants to choose able and suitable men, not rogues, and to choose conductors from gentlemen of good behaviour from the county, who do not 'shamfully chopp and change men' and allow them to run away. Let Henry Herbert be careful in this. Carpenters, coopers and bricklayers are needed at Lough Foyle; 20 carpenters, six bricklayers and ten coopers, together with about 100 who can ride a horse, should be taken from the counties of North Wales among the rest of the soldiers, as part of the numbers allotted to them. Lastly, some men recently, after being levied and consigned to captains, lewe run away; let care be taken to apprehend those who escape after receiving the Queen's pay, for this is a felony. The Queen is most unwilling to extend the power of her laws in cases of life and has hesitated to take away a man's life for such heinous crimes. But now, perceiving how frequently pressed men in her pay run away, the Queen is forced to provide therefor, has lately allowed a few to be executed as examples, and must continue to do so if the offence continues. Her toleration hitherto has been out of clemency and her proceeding now is according to ancient laws of the realm. Let more care be taken than hitherto in the performance of these directions. Clenennau letters and papers 166. vtls005594077 ISYSARCHB54	File - Ellis Maurice, Chester, to [his father William Maurice], 1600, Aug. 10. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Is surprised that the rest of the soldiers have not arrived, since the first group that came with Ellis Maurice was late coming to the city. At the first greeting, the Mayor and commissioners [said] they have certified the Council that William Maurice did not come on the proper day like the rest. If Ellis Maurice had had the full number, and those suitable men, with him, they would have written to the Council to excuse William Maurice, but now does not know how it will be accepted, for to-day, Wednesday, Ellis Maurice's men were viewed; they were 37 in number, and of these two were disallowed, leaving only 35. Must make a good 15 more. Does not know how William Maurice will excuse himself for neglecting this service. If the wind is right they must all be shipped to Lough Foyle. William Maurice called too little mise money from the county; the swords must be of the best 'turque' blades with good Irish Lilts which cost 13s. each, with belts. William Maurice must send more money immediately, almost as much again as Ellis Maurice has received; his charges hitherto have been about 20 marks. Is commanded by the commissioners not to leave his company until they are on board ship, and to train them once or twice a day. Does not intend to leave before discharging everything. Let William Maurice send the money without fail. 'Post[script]': Sir you must not sleepe to send these men by night and Day till the be here'. It is important to Ellis Maurice that they be in time; otherwise the Council will be certified further. Clenennau letters and papers 167.	File - Memorandum Of William Maurice, 1600, Aug. 31. Caernarvon, one of the deputy lieutenants of Caernarfonshire,

vtls005594078 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: A commission was directed to William Maurice and his cousin John Wynn of Gwydir, esq., as deputy lieutenants of Caernarfonshire, or in their absence, to the justices of the peace, to levy 100 men in the county for the Queen's service in Ireland and to see them conducted to Chester. William Maurice caused a general muster to be made at Caernarvon, the county town and situated in the middle of the county, on 26 Aug. John Wynn appointed a muster for the greater part of the county at Conwy, the same day, so that they could not both be present, according to the tenor of the commission. John Wynn appointed a muster for part of the county and William Maurice for the whole of the county, as commanded by the Lord Lieutenant [who commanded also] that both should be present. But John Wynn refused to join with William Maurice and countermanded the general summons. Therefore there was greater appearance at Conwy (where are the ablest men in the county); John Wynn had over 200 able men there, of whom he chose only 50, half the number, adding that William Maurice should not have any from that part of the county to make up the other 50 which he urged William Maurice to find, and if William Maurice took any he would discharge them, although William Maurice had a general summons made and for want of John Wynn's presence was forced to call on the justices to aid the service and to use all means to procure appearance. But the general muster had no more than 24 suitable men, and was driven by warrants and the sending around of the sheriff and justices to seek more, to the hindrance of the service and cost of the county of keeping together the number and the rest as they came. In the end was compelled to accept many unfit for service, and delivered to Ellis Maurice of Clennennau, gent., the leader, 50 soldiers, able and sufficient men, for service in Ireland according to the commission. Was unable to fill the number conveniently as he wished, for the reasons stated. The men are not equipped with clothes and armour, with which they are to be supplied at Chester by the Queen, except only for swords, which the leader has been commanded either to provide at Chester or to allow money therefor to the captain to provide in Ireland, with the rest of the arms. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 167. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Have received William Maurice's letter by his messenger. Understand therefrom that the 'fleamin' is angry at not having the money to pay his company's wages and for part of the salt, which the recipients promised to send. When they came home the weather, through frost and snow, 'did fall out for a man or a horse to travell'. They also had a [?] to have the cable and anchor taken up, which hindered them. Have sent the bearer William Batman with money for the skipper to pay his company's wages and for part of the salt. A bark will come with the first wind with the cable and anchor and some malt and wheat for William Maurice as requested. Thomas Powell or Peter Williams will come in the bark or by land; meanwhile, if the bearer can freight any bark or pinnace, have ordered him to load it with the salt and send to Milford. Request to William Maurice [...] the salt may be delivered and to see that the skipper and his company 'come about' with the ship and salt, otherwise Thomas Powell and Peter Williams will be at great cost to send a bark to fetch it. But they will do what they can between now and Christmas - they will be sent if possible and Thomas Powell and Peter Williams will do their best. Have sent this bark to be loaded with salt; request William Morise to have good measure taken from the ship and an account kept of what they receive. One or two more barks will come presently. They will not trust the ship to bring it because they cannot have the anchor and cable. The salt will cost them dear before arriving with them; this bark has £9 freight and so will the rest. William Morise shall have by this bark: 20 Bushels of malt at 6s. £6. 100 Wet fish 26s.8. 200 Dry fish 20s. 10Lbs raisins at 8d. 6s.8. 6Lbs currants at 8d. 4s. 1Lb pepper 5s. 1Lb ginger 20d. 4Oz. cloves 2s.4. 1Oz. mace 1s. 1/2Oz. saffron 20d. 1Lb. aniseed 6d. 4Oz. nutmegs 2s. 61/2Lbs sugar 13s. £10.4.4 [Sic]. All kinds of corn are very dear; wheat is 8s. a bushel, barley 5s.4 and rye 5s.4. William Maurice, esq., Clennau, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Since William Maurice rides to Shropshire tomorrow, informs him of two letters received by William Gruffith from Mr Hogeson, the 'heade coustomer' of North Wales touching the Queen's customs on the ship laden with bay salt, which he wishes William Gruffith to pay and certify immediately. William Maurice knows that no entry has yet been made, either skipper, merchant or bill of loading, in the customs house, nor any 'Band of ymloyment' taken. How well William Gruffith can answer this, he refers to William Maurice's discretion. Unless William Maurice takes order with his factor before his departure, understands that Mr Powell and Mr Williams, with whom William Maurice has bargained, will come to Pwllheli as soon as the wind is favourable to carry the ship and the rest of the salt and iron

Otherwise is likely to feel a smart to his discredit, negligence, loss and hindrance. Cannot state what custom to demand because no entry is made. Can only rely on William Maurice's promise to William Gruffith to see all discharged. Asks for William Maurice's answer in writing by the bearer. Sent letters to various counties in Wales for provision for the Queen's house; pains were taken in those counties by the lieutenants and justices of the peace for the quiet thereof. Wish to see the same service performed by composition rather than that the purveyor should use the commission. John Wyn refuses to join with William Maurice in musters, but musters by himself to the hindrance of the Queen's service and the greater cost of the Queen and the county. But in performance of his duty, and so that the service should not be delayed and hindered, has sent to Chester seven men out of the fifteen appointed for the county. They are, he hopes, sufficiently equipped (at his own cost) and able men, as appears from the indenture signed by the captain and the mayor of Chester's certificate, which William Maurice encloses. Is informed by the deputy of Ireland and the Council that there is need to send over supplies of foot and horse to reinforce some companies which are weakened by service against the rebels, against whom recently many successes have been had. If the army is now well supplied for a while, a swift conclusion will be made of that unnatural rebellion, which the Queen greatly desires because of her unwillingness to put her people to any further charge than is necessary. Commend to levy in the county 15 good footmen and to see them sent and armed according to the directions of the Privy Council. Let the recipients lay the charge only on 'the better sort' without descending to the poorer, to whom a small matter is more of a burden than a far greater to many others, whom the recipients should rate reasonably in a higher proportion. If they do not take care to choose good men, will not only betray the Queen's trust reposed in them, but will be a means of overthrowing the service, the success of which is to their own advantage. The Queen is informed that all the forces, even in the remotest places, are better furnished with food, lodgings and other necessities (though at the Queen's great cost) than ever before have been such numbers, considering all the difficulties of transportation, waste and inconvenience. These letters are to be their warrant. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 178. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

His master [John Wynn] has sent him to deliver letters re a muster to William Maurice and the sheriff [Richard Vaughan]. Since William Maurice had gone to Caernarvon and the time of his return was uncertain, thought it best to go to deliver the same to the sheriff. Hopes to find William Maurice at home upon his return. If he had a good horse, would have ridden to Caernarvon, but decided to go first to Llyn in order to lose no time. Fifteen men are required from the county and the letters are addressed to the sheriff of Caernarfonshire, and to John Wynn and William Maurice, late deputy lieutenants; they are signed by the Queen. Another letter, from the Privy Council, [directs that] the men should be at Chester by 20 May. Intends to be with William Maurice tomorrow afternoon as soon as he can leave the sheriff. Has received confirmed reports from various places of preparations in Spain to send forces shortly to Ireland not only to aid the rebels but also to make himself [sic] owner of the kingdom; must therefore increase the forces there with all speed to prevent such malicious designs; the Queen however had not expected to have cause to trouble her people at this time to send further forces when the rebellion was coming to an end (had it not been for the landing of a foreign power). Has hitherto found her subjects ready to put themselves to all necessary expense and now, when one of her crowns is threatened, does not doubt she will have the same cause as hitherto to command their duties and affections. Their burdens are no less grievous to them than to the Queen; she does not spare her own costs, with theirs, and spends more than any of her ancestors. Considers it well spent for the preservation of those dear to her. Requires them with all speed to have levied and mustered in Merionethshire 25 able, good and sufficient men to be sent to the port to embark according to the Privy Council's directions; also to have collected for the cost of equipping them with clothes and armour sufficient money, at the rate of £3.10.0 a man, to be sent according to the directions of the Privy Council, to whom they have referred for all details of the service. Earnest reminder to choose able men quickly and carefully as has hitherto most frequently been done, as a matter on which the better and speedier success of the service may depend. Gives them special command and hopes they will answer her expectations to avoid her displeasure. This letter shall be their warrant. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 180. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 181. vtls005594095 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Greenwich, to their friends [John Wynn] the high sheriff 'for the tyme ..., 1601, July 23. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Greenwich, to their friends [John Wynn] the high sheriff 'for the tyme being' of Merionethshire, the late deputy lieutenants and the justices of the peace of the same. At the time of the last levy in the county, the Queen believed she would not have to lay any further charge from Ireland on her subjects again so soon, or for a long time, since the success of the war against the rebels in Ireland gave (and still gives) hope that they would soon be suppressed and the country reduced to peaceful obedience. However the treacherous rebellion, now 'brought to a broken and desparate fortune', relies only on the help and support of foreign aid from the Queen's enemies; is informed of numbers of men who have either already arrived or are soon to arrive in Munster from Spain. The enemy's designs must be encountered in the same way; where they help the rebels, the Queen must strengthen her subjects. Has therefore ordered a levy of 5,000 men from various counties, towards which number she requested in recent letters 25 men from Merionethshire. The recipients are therein referred to the Privy Council for any further direction necessary; can only 'renne' [sic] previous frequent admonitions to choose suitable men, in particular, not to press 'loose persons or vagabonds' who have always been the greatest hindrance and cause of poor success to the Queen's service. The men are to be levied quickly enough to be at the port of Chester by 9 Aug.; there they shall find shipping and food for their passage and a place to live prepared for them until they embark. Let them be placed in the charge of a suitable person of the recipients' choice to lead them with care and diligence to the port, safely and in orderly fashion, and there to hand them over to a person chosen by the Privy Council to take charge of their transportation. The conductor and soldiers should be given an allowance for the journey at the usual daily rate of 4s. and 8d. respectively. The conduct money, and the allowance for coat money (at the usual rate) will be paid at the Exchequer to any person appointed by the recipients, who, upon receipt

	by the Council of a certificate thereof, shall request repayment. Arms and clothes of the soldiers should also be seen to; these may perhaps be more conveniently prepared with speed in London and sent to the port, than provided by the county, partly because the service requires great speed and partly because the extraordinary arming and clothing of the soldiers costs more than the allowance demanded from the county, the extra cost whereof the Queen, for the ease of the county, is willing to defray herself. The Queen in her letters directs the county, instead of arms and clothes, to collect and send money at the rate of £3.10.0 a man, i.e., 40s. for clothes and 30s. for arms. Let it therefore be collected and sent to Sir Thomas Tasborough, kt, one of the letters of the Exchequer, by 9 Aug. Request for performance hereof; also let tripartite rolls be made as usual of the number of soldiers, one to be sent to the Council, another kept and the third given to the leader. Postscript: It is said in the letter that the arms and clothes will be ready for the soldiers at the port. Because of the difficulty of carrying arms to Chester have instead directed the arms to be delivered to them upon arrival in Ireland. They shall receive the clothes at the port as previously arranged. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 181. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 182. vtls005594096 ISYSARCHB54	File - William Lloide, Llanwnda, to 1601, Aug. 1. Richard Vaughan, esq., high sheriff of Caernarfonshire, and William Mores, esq, Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: Encloses copies of letters received that morning, and a letter from his master [John Wynn], saying that he has received the original letters for Merionethshire and has heard that the Caernarfonshire letters are coming, of which he wished William Lloide go to inform Richard Vaughan and William Mores. Since speed is required of the commissioners, in this service, John Wynn thought that William Lloide, in his master's name, should join with William Mores and Richard Vaughan, as they did the last time, to arrange to rate and levy a sum of money in the county. But William Lloide did not know how many men are to be levied from the county, and has sent a messenger to John Wynn to find out; upon receipt of the answer, will come to Richard Vaughan and William Mores to do as requested. Meanwhile sends by his cousin Thomas Hughes, the bearer, copies of the Merionethshire letters so that Richard Vaughan and William Mores know of the service and may have men pressed in churches tomorrow, if they wish. Thus they and their men from the upper end may meet at Caernarvon a week to-day with John Wynn and the justices of the lower end and the men may be mustered together and sent, and the indentures made. If Richard Vaughan and William Mores have already received the Caernarfonshire letters, they, of the upper end, may send John Wynn copies and meet, agree on a sum of money and have it levied. John Wynn and the justices of the lower end, on receipt of Richard Vaughan and William Mores's letters or copies thereof, may likewise meet and settle on a suitable sum for equipping their half of the men. Is commanded by John Wynn's letters to have men pressed in the commotes of Isgwyrfaai and [Arllechwedd] Uchaf, and means to go to arrange with the constables for the performance thereof. Intends to return tomorrow night; by then is sure to have heard from John Wynn. Would also like to hear of Richard Vaughan and William Mores's decision and asks them to let him know so that he can inform his master whether either of them has received the original letters. The time is too short for them and John Wynn to wait to hear from each other. Richard Vaughan and William Mores, upon receipt of the letters, should put them into execution. Postscript: An estimate of the costs 'to sett out' 25 men for the service, made by William Lloide: Money to be sent to the Exchequer to equip the men, at a. Rate of £3.10.0 a man. £87.10.0. Press money and 'the waste thereof'. 20S. Conduct money at the rate the last men had, for. 6 Days' march. £5. Conductor's fee. £10. Taking the money to London. £10. Extraordinary charges and waste in the collecting and. 20S. to make up the defect of the last and for the. Indenture and discharge at Chester. £16.10.0. Total. £130. If fifty men go from the county, the sum should be doubled. Has sent a similar estimate to his master, whose opinion William Mores shall hear and who would be glad to know William Mores's. Nodyn Note [generalNote]:

There remains now no way but to confer with David Roberts, who has come to William Maurice, and for William Maurice to use his credit with him on William Thomas's behalf, which he does not doubt can accomplish more than £20. Let William Maurice pay him the interest until Michaelmas and then rely on William Thomas's credit; promises to pay it then. Meanwhile, because William Thomas's credit depends on it, let him pay David Roberts from his or William Maurice's money, if no other way will do. Will stand to it and keep William Maurice harmless; David Roberts should acknowledge payment which William Thomas expects he will do at William Maurice's instance if William Maurice showed him William Thomas's letter. David Roberts would, if asked, do more for William Thomas than lend him £20; William Thomas says 'bona fide' without flattery, that he may use William Thomas far beyond that mark, poor as he is. Upon their love, this is how William Maurice must deal with him for the credit's sake. He knows how careful William Thomas was when it was not a matter of credit. If he is not, he should inform William Beake by Wednesday, for Beaumaris fair is next Thursday and William Maurice intends to see his lordship on his journey there or back. If William Maurice does not wish the hogshead sent there, William Beake will send it to Pwllheli with the boat that brings William Beake a butt of sack from merchant Tudor. The boat gives him trouble and he wants one to use at his own convenience. It disheartens him that when the things were being loaded on Sunday, Mr Gwyn prowled towards the boat and when William Beake came went away, and others did as they would. But would not wish to meddle unless he could be as well provided as those who oppose with boats, pikes and other necessities which he would not want if the boat were ready. The boat is overloaded with other things and six empty casks remain. William Beake will make good account for them as money is owed for wages and help and this may discharge them. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 193. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 194. vtls005594108 ISYSARCHB54	File - Maurice Gruffythe, Llanfair, to his cousin [William Maurice], 1602, June 4. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Sir Richard Trevor has surveyed her ladyship's jointure and is willing to give her £300 a year from Anglesey and Caernarfonshire. She also has £80 a year for two years and is to have a third from Ireland, which if the service there prospers, may be worth [...] a year for it was at that rate in Sir Henry [? Bagenall's] time and more, so Sir Patrick Barnwell said. Sir Richard Trevor goes next Monday to Holyhead and then to Ireland with the first wind. Maurice Gruffythe advises William Maurice to send Maurice Gruffythe's cousin John ap Richard ap Elisa to Mr Turbridge, and both of them on to her ladyship's next week, to prepare William Maurice's way. William Maurice should prepare to ride through Merionethshire with his eight men and Maurice Gruffythe's cousins William Thomas and Robert Wynn Brinkir with two men each immediately when they come home, so that they are ready if required to be bound for what William Maurice promises. Thus William Maurice may finish the business in one journey or never. William Maurice should tell everyone he is going to the Council or to Shropshire on business. Rondle Smith who keeps all their accounts says her jointure in Wales is [worth] over £400 a year; her two younger sons have annuities of 100 marks each from their brother's living and the unmarried 'wenche' is to have 1,000 marks upon Sir Richard Trevor, so that they need not burden their mother. Hears of no debt upon her except £300 claimed by Owen ap Robert Owen, whom she sues for £5,000 on a bond that he has forfeited. Thinks an easy composition can be made with Owen ap Robert Owen when William Maurice goes there. If all fails, and William Maurice thinks it necessary, he may have Mr Turbridge promise Sir John Savage £100 at Michaelmas of her ladyship's rents. Answers every point as follows:. 1. William Maurice says he remembers Maurice Gruffythe's first motion and knows what he intends. Requests continued performance thereof. Let William Maurice not hope in any other matter, for there is no good to be looked for, as William Maurice knows. 2. As for the seizures, John Williams says he will discharge Maurice Gruffythe with the rest, and Maurice Gruffythe has promised to make him a double bond for £10 to be paid at Michaelmas. He [John Williams] promised to come to Llanfair yesterday, but did not come. Let William Maurice press him to keep his promise. If he does not come before going to London, let William Maurice be bound to him for the £10 and Maurice Gruffythe will save him harmless; be it 'never soe chargeable', let Maurice Gruffythe be discharged with William Maurice and will pay his portion. 3. As for Maurice Gruffythe's matter against William Thomas Williams, if it is to be heard this term, let William Maurice listen and do as he knows Maurice Gruffythe would do and no more. 4. Was approached by a friend of Rhes Johnes who wishes to marry. Hears he is a wealthy bachelor of good living, and as William Maurice knows, Maurice Gruffythe has 'a wenche to bestowe'. William Maurice may confer therein and if he finds any likelihood of a match, proceed as he sees necessary. William Maurice knows Maurice Gruffythe will be ruled by him in anything reasonable. 5. William Maurice says he has 'taken care' to paying Arthur Williams, but does not say whether he has done so and has any discharge. If William Maurice does not have it already begs him to get it, for he knows Maurice Gruffythe's case. 6. Has given the news to William Maurice's cousin who is glad and bids William Maurice act effectively and boldly and not be slack or negligent. Liberality is these days a necessary virtue and time is precious; let William Maurice then lose no time. Maurice Gruffythe is his to use in anything. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 198. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Since a messenger was coming to William Maurice from Bryn kir, William Beake writes to say that Mr William Thomas, Mrs Gaynor and their family are well, as are all William Maurice's friends. In view of William Maurice's long stay in London, since he may have some leisure, reminds him of his commission for the admiralty, not only to suppress Rutherch ap Richard's commission but also to obtain a new one for whomsoever he thinks fit; also to sue forth the registrar's commission to Mr Edward Gruffyth late feodary. If William Maurice is willing since Edward Gruffyth is old and not always able to travel, let him join William Beake with him 'et eorum atteri'. Must inform William Maurice of an abuse committed by Pwllheli men against the Queen and her Court of Admiralty - hears William Maurice is vice admiral in these parts. A ship of a hundred [tons] at least arrived on the coast, a Spaniard by all men's judgement, and certainly known to be loaded with Spanish goods. Maurice Gruffythe's cousin William Gruffythe, brother of the 'toppe' of Maurice Gruffythe's kin whom Maurice Gruffythe esteems above the rest, thought to do the Queen great service in apprehending such enemies and with a company of young gentlemen, kinsmen and friends of William Maurice and Maurice Gruffythe, undertook the voyage therefor, but they were crossed and prevented by men of Pwllheli from having a bark for the service, and failed therein. If they are presented and accused before the admiral, does not doubt that they will be punished according to their deserts. William Maurice knows Pwllheli men have always been aiders and assisters of pirates and are now apparently favourers of enemies. Now Maurice Gruffythe hears, 'they doe aledge that they were lett passe from gest befor, the which can not excuse them for any offence commytted by them, for those gentlemen dyd take them for frenchmen and tooke nothyng of them but what was geven to the pylate to gyde them to a ffayre rode and soe thos gentlemen nothyng culpable to theyr offence'. Now it is said that by some accident one of the Spaniards or strangers is hurt and dead and a great matter is intended in Pwllheli concerning the same. Begs William Maurice to see that his kinsmen and friends are not wronged; the other party is a Spaniard or stranger and from a country where many Englishman have 'miscaried' without any law or revenge. Had Maurice Gruffythe been at home, they would not have escaped as they did. Begs William Maurice's favour in justice, and does not doubt to have it for his friends, as if for himself. Hopes to see William Maurice 'here' shortly and wishes to know the time so that he may be at home. By perusal of the subsidy books, from the hundred rolls and the examination of former juries together with the testimony of all the county's under-officers and all other possible means, and by conferring with the inhabitants, have enrolled the names of all freeholders in the hundreds, with additions of dwelling 'and such other qualitie and sorte as the most parte of us thinke good to be of Rent and worth within the sayde Countie', deducting their costs for supporting themselves and their families and necessary maintenance. Through necessity, in order that a number of freeholders could serve in juries, the former sheriff last year certified some to serve in all trials for £4 a year. Most of them offer their oaths and the testimony of their neighbours that they are not worth that sum in racked rent 'to finde them selves and familie and chardges'. But to avoid 'contrarities' so that the service does not differ much from that of the former sheriff, have set them down as he did, at £4 a year only, to serve the King in inquisitions, trials and juries. Clenennau letters and papers 204. vtls005594119 ISYSARCHB54	File - [?Ann Wen Brynkir], Clennau, to her brother [Sir William Maurice], Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Hopes and prays William Maurice is well. 'My ladie' and the writer's cousin Jane Gruffith are well as are all at home, longing for William Maurice's return. His countrymen, friends and neighbours report that William Maurice should 'solister' his business well in London for here in the country [in the Court] of the Marches William Maurice and his men are deeply fined and no-one showed them any favour there as William Maurice shall perceive from a letter written to the writer by Gruffith Jones, which she encloses. Therefore she and other well-wishers advise him to inform the King how he is treated by the Council and how hardly Justice Parker uses William Maurice at his late age, while William Maurice attends the King and cannot be dealing with his own business at home, and to show him how he [William Maurice] is fined everywhere, at the Great Sessions and the Council in the Marches. Thinks William Maurice should ask the King to tell the Chancellor and President to treat him well, and to show him favour for his great service to the Queen and then the King, being knight of the shire for so many years and attending Parliament duly and truly. 'By reason alsoe that you are his god father and intituled his highnes Kinge of great Britaine', let the King speak a word or two for William Maurice or he [William Maurice] will suffer. William Maurice should not be 'abashed' to speak to the King and ask him to be treated with favour by him as by Queen Elizabeth. [The writer continues in her own hand.] Let William Maurice take in good part her boldness with his secretary, George, who went to serve the 'sirif [] of Anley' a week ago. Mr Williams and company come in three weeks; let William Maurice remember to send servants to assist as soon as possible so that they may send for them against their coming. Requests William Maurice to get her a bottle of rose 'alolis' for she has had a pain in her back for three days. Thomas ap R[] asks for shears for the garden and seeds, for none are to be had in the country. Her ladyship asks for a bottle of 'sinamunt' water and one of 'sall'. Could obtain no money from his tenants; some trouble her more than others. Moris ap Elisa promised money every day and others besides which William Maurice shall hear when he comes home. Could get no money except 20s. from Robert ap Pue ap Rinallt which she gave to the boy to bring his charges to London. Her cousin Grase verch Humffrey is not willing for her son to be bound an apprentice for she has no money to spend on him; she is especially unwilling to have him be a tailor, and asks William Maurice to place him for a while in some service. Requests William Maurice to enquire in the Court of War[d]s about Tommas Pue; sent the parson of 'Llanvehenel a traise' [Llanfihangel y Traethau] £5 by Moris []. Concerning business to be done for them in Parliament:. 1. Their charters and fee farm have for long not been confirmed or renewed. Request William Maurice to act for them and have the renewed or confirmed, with such additions or omissions as he thinks necessary. For that purpose they deliver the charters with the common seal of the town to the custody of William Maurice in trust that he will deal faithfully therewith for their good. 2. A fair is held annually at Harlech on St Andrew's Day but no drovers or other people of the county come there usually on that day, only the people dwelling around the town because of other fairs held in other towns nearby about the same day, which is prejudicial to the people of the town and those living nearby. Request to have the day of the fair altered to the feast of Simon and Jude. 3. Request that William Maurice by himself or through his friends moves for the sessions for Merionethshire always to be kept at Harlech by Act of Parliament. If William Maurice is successful in these matters, will reward him for his trouble; thereunto they bind themselves. 4. There is no burgess in Parliament for the towns in Merionethshire; request for William Maurice to arrange this [privilege] for this county, as is the case in all other counties. Clenennau letters and papers 205a. vtls005594121 ISYSARCHB54	File - Robert Morgan [burgess of Harlech], Harlech, to Sir William Maurice, 1603/4, March 12. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Regrets that he could not see William Maurice before William Maurice goes to Parliament. The bailiffs and burgesses of Harlech deliver up to William Maurice's safe custody all the writings that they have relating to the keeping of their lands and of parts of the lands of William Maurice and many other gentlemen of Ardudwy. The charter was granted to them by Edward I and has been renewed or confirmed only once, in the time of Richard II. It has a hole in it from some accident before their time. The confirmation is to be seen at the end of it. As for the fee farm, Robert Morgan thinks it needs no confirming or renewing for there can be no better wording thereof; William Maurice knows Mr [...]s opinion of it. The fee farm mentions payment of £22 a year, and now they pay only [£18].13.4; there remains [£1].6.8 which they have [since] the new ordinance of Wales. Therefore think it best to leave the fee farm as it is except to have the Reddendo annuatim as they now pay, namely £18.3.4; they had only this [four] marks' allowance when they lost by the tolls levied in Ardudwy, more than £10. Robert Morgan and the other burgesses of Harlech thus commit these matters to William Maurice's consideration, with a request for him to use discretion and take good counsel therein, beseeching God to prosper his journey with a safe return. Postscript: If he can procure the confirming it can only be inspeximus cartam proavi nostri [sic] Edwardi nuper Regis Anglie, etc. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 205a. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

vtls005594125 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has received William Morris's letter concerning the profits of Llanbeblig. Although it is small, it has already passed Henry Johnes's hands for three years of which two have expired next Michaelmas. Then William Morris shall have it before any other; meanwhile let him be assured that he may have anything of Henry Johnes's. Cannot name a definite time to see William Morris, but as soon as his wife is delivered and able to go 'abrode', will take the opportunity to see his mother to do his duty to her. Meanwhile let William Morris excuse him and continue his good opinion of Henry Johnes which Henry Johnes hopes he will give him no occasion to alter. Henry Johnes's grandmother wrote to him by this bearer for money. Henry Johnes paid £20 last May and left order to pay the rest with his cousin Sir William Thomas. If it is unpaid, asks William Morris to entreat her to be patient until Henry Johnes comes to William Morris, when he will take order for her satisfaction. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 209. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

As for her annuity of £50, pays her yearly. With regard to the charges which his mother makes, upon his return from South Wales, will come to do his duty to her and they will confer about everything, which he hopes will be to their mutual satisfaction. Would have seen his mother sooner had he thought he would not be offensive to her, for her blessing is a thing he esteems above all worldly treasure. His sister Anne is ill in Hereford, but as soon as she is well, which he hopes will be soon, Henry Johnes will send for her and she shall come to his mother. As for the gown at which his grandmother takes offence, Henry Johnes will buy her a new one rather than that she should be offended. Would like a note from his mother of what stuff she left behind; cannot hear of any more than he told William Morris in London. As for the small tithe of Llanbeblig, will with all his heart bestow 'hir ladishipe' until his coming there. As for the tithe which Lewis David Lloyd has taken since Henry Johnes has been there, desires William Morris to call him to account and take them for himself.

Robert Morgan, Henry Price's grandfather, assured to Henry Price's wife the possession of the house and demesne of Taltreuddyn, where he [Robert Morgan] lives, among other things, in her mother's marriage settlement and her own, the latter by assurance between him and Henry Price's father. But Robert Morgan persuaded Henry Price's father that he should enjoy Taltreuddyn for his life as he could not well spare it, and in lieu and recompense assured to Henry Price's wife other things of less value, but is also unwilling that Henry Price should take the 'entire Commodities' from those, contrary to his own act and assurance and against all reason. Because Henry Price does not yield to his unreasonable desires, they are at 'some discrepantie'. Now understands that the meers between Llandanwg and Llanfihangel in the Marsh are set down by an inquisition and that it is intended to enclose part of the marsh. Reminds William Morris that he allowed Henry Price to enclose some part and if there is any division or enclosure (which cannot happen without William Morris's assent, since he has an interest) to remember Henry Price and his wife so that although Henry Price has only one toft in his possession in Harlech, William Morris will call Henry Price's father to the division. Clenennau letters and papers 223. vtls005594139 ISYSARCHB54	File - [Sir William Maurice] to Sir Harry 1606, Oct. 30. [Johnes], Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: When they were conferring in London about a settlement between Henry Johnes and his mother, Henry Johnes seemed 'conformable' by his words and promises to satisfy her in all points required by law and conscience. He yielded that she should have the church among other things, and what other satisfaction he demanded, and promised to appoint for her annuity of £320 a year lands to cover it at rates such as others had from him, thereby ridding him and his sureties of the danger of bonds, having already forfeited for non-payment in May. He also promised to make similar arrangements for his brothers' portions and for his sister, which William Maurice and Henry Johnes's steward David Morgan Rees thought most fitting, and undertook to visit his mother for her blessing and to make settlement. William Maurice was ready at Henry Johnes's request to return home with him to settle things, which would have been no hindrance to Henry Johnes. Though William Maurice wrote several letters mentioning also the sending of Henry Johnes's sister Anne to her mother, which is the cause of his present writing, he received no answer except that he should have the church at as reasonable a price as any other, as indeed he should have his own by right at a reasonable rate. But Henry Johnes's price was high to William Maurice and Henry Johnes's mother, though reasonable to a stranger, and despite what Henry Johnes said William Maurice finds from his son Sir William Thomas that he [William Thomas] has another year yet paid for. Thus has generally run over matters. In particular, with regard to Henry Johnes's mother's claim for maintenance, his mother granted Henry Johnes good allowance hoping to find him a kind and obedient son, and Henry Johnes treated her hardly as she says, not allowing her to have her own after agreeing with her, and selling it before her face which could not but grieve her, and keeping other things from her such as her gelding, sheep, household stuff and her father's gown. [This does not show due consideration to her by Henry Johnes] if he wishes to enjoy her love. Cannot answer her to the contrary on Henry Johnes's behalf although he has argued for him so much that she thinks him partial to Henry Johnes. Can therefore prolong no longer but must see what law and equity will allow for her maintenance, security for her annuity and her other rights Writes to Henry Johnes to move him to have due consideration lest when 'a gappe is opened (which I maye doe) it is not so easily shutt upp againe'. Let Henry Johnes therefore decide and send his decision by a good messenger with full instructions, if he cannot come himself to settle matters. Perhaps he may not if he goes to London, but William Maurice wishes Henry Johnes's mother to be satisfied before he goes to London or else has promised her to try what the law or Chancery will yield. With regard to Henry Johnes's sister, whom her mother wishes to have with her, as befits her and Henry Johnes more than to be with another, even a close friend, William Maurice and Henry Johnes's mother promise not to 'matche' her without Henry Johnes's consent and William Maurice promises not to speak of any match but by Henry Johnes's direction. Henry Johnes promised to send her long ago; if her one leg is the reason, no-one will take more care to seek a cure for it than her own mother. Knows no other reason why Henry Johnes should keep her from her mother unless it be the request of Sir William Thomas, William Maurice's son, to William Maurice and Henry Johnes's mother which it is unreasonable to ask at William Maurice's cost and her mother says she will never yield. Henry Johnes's father left Henry Johnes's sister by his will £500 to be paid soon with an increase of £50 use for the same yearly until she is married from which she may spare much besides her maintenance so that her portion is increased yearly, apart from what Henry Johnes, her mother and William Maurice would add for her preferment. It would be ungrateful in William Maurice to yield, even to a kinsman or friend, to see her matche in a place that cannot deserve half her portion, and unnatural and unkind in Henry Johnes to wish it; it might be prejudicial to him. There is no haste to bestow her except to a good place; if she died Henry Johnes would gain her portion. Request to send her to her mother or appoint a time and William Maurice

Would be very sorry to give offence and if William Moris [] brothers that complains of Henry Johnes, wishes to be allowed to answer before being condemned, for he could wish for no better justice than William Moris. As for Llanbadarn, William Moris will find Henry Johnes constant in his promise, and Henry Johnes will bring his counsel's opinion for he desires nothing but to be squire of it after William Moris's days. As for his sister Ann Mortimer, entreats William Moris's patience; she will come with Henry Johnes soon to do her duty to William Moris and their mother. Entreats William Moris's good opinion of him; it will not be long before he comes. Has sent money by his cousin Roland Greifit and will bring the rest himself. Clenennau letters and papers 248. vtls005594165 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), from the Court at Whitehall, to their friends [Thomas Bodvel], high sheriff, and the rest of ..., 1608/9, March 24. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Privy Council (named), from the Court at Whitehall, to their friends [Thomas Bodvel], high sheriff, and the rest of the commissioners for levying aid in Caernarfonshire. Since sending the King's commission and instructions for levying aid to make Prince Henry, the King's eldest son, kt, have understood more fully what is desired or doubted by the King's subjects therefor. Thought good therefore to assist the recipients' endeavours with their advice. Though the service is important, being a matter of demonstration of duty to the King and Prince, in this and all other things they are careful that furtherance thereof does not cause a subject more hardship than the King intends. They consider therefore more and more the consequences to subjects of looking into evidence, distinctions of tenure, inquisitions of the true quantities and values of lands by jury and the like, which is required by the ordinary course of law, for it does not rest with them to warrant what light any busy person may take by perusal of evidence, upon what just ground men's lands may be charged with tenures in chief or knight's service or how the estimation of the true quantities and values of soccage lands though meant for the present service may in future be turned to the subject's prejudice. Cannot see how these effects may be prevented if there are separate proceedings for knight's service lands and soccage lands and the rates taxed on soccage lands are applied to the quantity and value of the several lands, though it be in the nature of an offer or composition. Inform the recipients that the King will not be displeased if they proceed by way of composition rather than inquisition unless the parties are too partial to themselves in a matter that arises so seldom and from so great a cause for comfort. The composition for every person should be in one gross sum for all his lands in the county without distinction of tenures, quantities or values. Believe this will be safest for subjects for the future and therefore more acceptable for the present if they are made to understand it; the King's benefit will be better advanced by this course of composition by their care and good example than by the other formal and legal course. Considering the rates returned on the

	several commissions in the realm compared with the differences requisite, will be the fire in every man's work. They will perform the service so much in their hands so that they deserve a good report to the King and the King's special thanks, the fruits of which they will find to their comfort. Have considered the best course to take in their own particulars who would rather go before than come behind and other in anything appertaining to this service and would be loth to cause the recipients to spend more time than was necessary in the execution thereof through the negligence of persons whom they are forced to employ in their absence since they have already said how fit they think it is for all men to be received to composition, in which they are sure no man will conceive that the contributions ought to be guided by the ordinary rule of taxing men at inferior rates as in subsidies considering the different nature thereof. Therefore inform the recipients that the King has allowed them leave to make their particular composition in London with commissioners appointed by him so that they will be relieved of the trouble of sending their evidence or committing trusts to several persons in every county to agree for their composition but will have it delivered in London in one entire sum for a composition in gross without distinction of the portions of land or tenure. Request the recipients to give notice that if any of the lords spiritual or temporal wish to compound in London rather than the counties, their compositions shall be so accepted on the recipients' certificate of their names, as long as they send authorised persons by 20 June. But if the recipients believe they are more willing to deal with them in the county by composition or ordinary course of law, let them proceed therewith by virtue of the commissions. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 248. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 251. vtls005594168 ISYSARCHB54	File - Owen Ap John to Robert [Cecil], 1609, July. Earl of Salisbury, Lord High Treasurer of England, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The petitioner for 50 years and his ancestors for many years before him have been tenants of the King and his predecessors in two parcels of ground, called coed keven and coed y Garreg vawr, part of the [township] of Gest, Caernarfonshire, at a certain yearly rent. The suppliant about 20 years ago took a lease for 26 years for the parcels from Sir William Mores, the King's 'ffermor' of the township, at a certain rent; he permitted the suppliant to enjoy it for 20 years but about six months ago, and at various times since, has vexed the suppliant in the Court of Exchequer at Westminster for supposed trespass on the parcels and often interrupted the suppliant's possession therein and chased and impounded his cattle feeding there. In further wrong to the suppliant, understanding that he came to answer his suit, William Mores had him arrested at two actions and he was committed to the Fleet and the 'counter' without just cause and to his hindrance. William Mores, one of the King's deputy lieutenants in the county and of great command and ability, threatens to beggar the suppliant with long and tedious suits of law for the lands, which are all the living he has to maintain himself, his wife, children and family. [He] has grown poor and aged and is unable to follow his cause in law with so great an adversary, though his title is good. Begs Robert Cecil to refer the examination of his cause to the Justices of the Great Sessions for the county, and that they, on proof of his title, settle the possession of the premises in him according to equity, and make an end thereof by the assent of both parties, or else certify who's at fault and the suppliant ... Sir Patricke Morrey, kt, one of the King's Privy Chamber, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: There is a matter touching a poor town in which the King receives about £18 or £20 a year; it has a very fair castle which now falls into decay and all the town 'almost become beggers' unless the King will relieve them not at any charge of his but by granting them that the assizes, quarter sessions and concourses may by his grant and the confirmation of their charter, be granted to them with such other things as they shall petition for their own good and the King's advantage. To further their suit and petition, since William Maurice has promised his best endeavours, being himself one of the corporation and his ancestors having for long been constables who dwelled in the castle and kept it in repair until recently in the late Queen's time the office and fee were granted to strangers who only accepted the fee and allowed the house to fall into decay, they requested William Maurice to name someone to deal for them as the cause required. He, in goodwill to Patricke Morrey and from his acquaintance with him, was bold to prefer the bearer, his kinsman, to Patricke Morrey to move the matter and if Patricke Morrey is willing to take it in hand, William Maurice had rather they should gratify him than any other, not doubting his care in prosecuting the cause. In case he does not come before the Assizes, shows him Sir John Wynne's opinion concerning the Prince's mise and encloses his letter for William Maurice to peruse before returning it to William Maurice. Conferred yesterday with Mr Johnes the Counsellor about the business and he says it does not require any extraordinary haste since this mise, he says, is not to be levied as long as the first seven years are unexpired and the former payments unpaid. He says that the Prince expects nothing else at their hands but the custom of the county as used in all mises hitherto. He further says that they are agreed in Anglesey that the mise shall begin to be paid immediately after the expiration of their mise or six years, and it would wrong the county if [the commissioners for Caernarfonshire] did besides draw greater inconvenience on them by admitting the subsidies to come upon them at the same time as this does. This business requires some advisement and deliberation but since William Thomas cannot be at the Assizes and Sir John Wynne is willing to bear the blame for this small delay, William Thomas will return the commission and will agree with whatever the majority of the commissioners agree, whether it be at the Assizes or not. Clenennau letters and papers 270. vtls005594187 ISYSARCHB54	File - Owen Ap John Ap Ieuan Ap Roberte, Caernarvon castle, to Sir William Maurice, kt, Clennau, 1612, May 7. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Crosses in all ages have been the quickest means of men's recognition of their folly. Humbly acknowledges that Owen ap John's disordered tongue was the cause of William Maurice's offence. His heart is oppressed with heaviness since William Maurice, having heretofore 'experimented' Owen ap John's faithfulness and readiness in any service towards him or to his benefit, because of which some of Owen ap John's neighbours have always borne spleen against him, and having now used Owen ap John's best time, now seems upon a small dislike to punish Owen ap John's old age. As this grieves Owen ap John, so it is an occasion of joy to his neighbours whom he crossed, who take a 'complacemete' in Owen ap John's durance - a grateful requital of all his former service to William Maurice. The consideration of Owen ap John's folly and obstinacy towards William Maurice makes the former send these lines as messengers of his distressed case to show with submission his grief to William Maurice's compassionate heart and charitable conscience. Prays William Maurice to pour the oil of his mercy and comfort into Owen ap John's wounded heart as he expects the same at God's hands. Exposes himself to William Maurice's mercy; he that shows mercy shall find it. Owen ap John's poor estate is a thing of nothing to William Maurice; let William Maurice accept his prayers, which are of more value than wealth, and Owen ap John's submission for his fault. To forgive is the noblest kind of revenge; blessed is he that bears a revengeless heart and commiserates with his neighbour's extremity. Whoever does not show love and mercy grievously injures these attributes of God's majesty. Let William Maurice set his heart justly towards Owen ap John and end all difference in the court of his good conscience. Sighs and heaviness prevent Owen ap John from giving further direction to his clerk. Let William Maurice's heart be opened with the key of mercy to receive Owen ap John's submission, as the grave is open for his 'decayed carcase' soon to inhabit it. It is the way of all flesh; old age and white hair are the harbingers of death.

	Let William Maurice weigh Owen ap John's case, for they are of an age, and let Owen ap John's prayers like angels make William Maurice's way ready to heaven, and William Maurice's mercy be to his eternal praise. The remembrance of a good deed will never perish. Rests in hope of a comfortable answer. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 270. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 271. vtls005594188 ISYSARCHB54	File - W[illiam] Humffrey to [Sir William Maurice], 1612, June 10. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Thanks for William Maurice's kind letters. Has written to his cousin Richard Hu[...] enclosing his measure to buy and make him a suit of apparel and asking him if he did not intend to satisfy William Humffrey's request to deliver the letter to William Maurice, who might see to providing William Humffrey's necessities. Believed this rather than fail in his purpose, but as he now sees, is behind unless upon other letters which he has written and sent William Maurice by Hugh ap Harry Caddarne. To prevent the worst, thought it requisite to write to William Maurice fully telling him his mind. Asks William Maurice to procure for him a dozen [?liveries] and cloaks, about 30s. each, a robe for a foot boy and thirteen hats and feathers, with a reasonable day to pay therefor. The purse which William Humffrey sent in William Maurice's trunk is £8 or £9, and is under seal; asks William Maurice to see the money counted himself for William Humffrey had intended to send £10 and cannot remember taking out more than 20s. Sends by the bearer to deliver what he can spare to William Humffrey for buying a suit of apparel for William Humffrey. Expects the suit to be of coloured satin, cut with a 'diamond pincke' all over, with a cloak 'liend befor with vellvett and a fayer lace about of gould and silke and a fayer gould and silver bottom upon the coller hanging down further'. Begs William Maurice to have one of his men, or some man of skill, help the bearer to provide all William Humffrey's necessities, according to the note which he has. Asks William Maurice to supply in ready money or credit what the bearer lacks besides the 20 marks in the trunk and what he has; will pay when the drovers come down about All Saints or St Andrew at the furthest, which is 'just half a yeare forbering'. His bidding has wholly emptied his purse. Had to treble what he intended to bestow and as it happened a hundred marks will hardly finish it. Had the weather been such that he might have made it ready against Mr Justice's coming by, would have been well pleased for his charges and toil, which is worse than the charges. Hopes others will have comfort hereafter. Whatever undertaking William Maurice makes for William Humffrey, the latter promises to pay and discharge and to save William Maurice harmless. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 271. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Last Hilary Term William Maurice, to Thomas Owen's instance, wrote a letter to Sir Thomas Middleton signifying that he did not challenge it, and would yield further security thereof. Thereupon Thomas Middleton caused a release to be made from William Maurice and Thomas Owen, which Thomas Owen sealed and delivered. Asks William Maurice that if Thomas Middleton sends his man with the lease to him to be sealed, William Maurice will do so; assures William Maurice that he will do in lieu thereof whatever William Maurice thinks fitting in answer to his demand at Clennau. Postscript: William Maurice is sure to have occasion to talk to Mr Bale, whom Thomas Owen has instructed to explain to William Maurice Thomas Owen's matter against the heir and executors of Maurice Gruffith, that Thomas Owen was 'damnified' and how the law will give him damage on the book and his part of the payment of £20 to Mr Arthur Williams. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 273. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Will not [...] other honest gentlemen his cousins Mr Robert ap John ap [...] John Powell ap Owen and his son Robert [...] and unjust dealing with William Maurice to rob him and wrest [...] from him contrary to their pretended recovery. These are emboldened by Justice Barker's favour [...] against William Maurice whom they see Justice Barker disfavors and thought [...] have Justice Barker's countenance against him in law [...] of pleas or in the Chancery Court of equity. William Maurice hoped to find justice in both. Desires no more and deserves no less; grounds his greatest title on King James, who, as Lord Cooke called him, is the fountain of justice, in whose name William Maurice craves the same. Never offended Justice Barker except in being earnest in the King's requests which he hoped Justice Barker would be as willing to perform. If any cause moved Justice Barker to the contrary, he had no cause to bear spleen against William Maurice especially in matters of justice and law. Particularises two or three in which William Maurice thinks and is advised, Justice Barker granted hard order against him, and for two of which he asks redress at Justice Barker's hand. Two are in respect of himself and the King, touching their [...] and inheritance, and the third is for a poor widow with five children, some of them cripples, for whom William Maurice speaks in charity and hopes Justice Barker will act likewise. Ends with a greeting in Sir William Maurice's hand. Torn.

Clenennau letters and papers 277. vtls005594194 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn, Llanfrothen, to [Sir William Maurice], 1612, Nov. 26. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: As promised, sends William Maurice the news received from London. The Prince died not of any wrong done to him by the physicians, as was believed, but of a surfeit during his disease, which was not long. He patiently thanked God in prayer for his visitation. The King, eager to see him in his perplexity, was dissuaded by the Council, who urged him to ride to Theobalds and to stay for a while, which he did until the time of his departure three days later. He is generally lamented. John Wynn's father is 'stayed' by the Lord Chamberlain for ten days after the term to be a mourner. Only earls, barons and baronets mourn. The cause of John Wynn's cousin Pierse Griffith is dismissed from the Court of Wards and the possession of the land settled in the other party. Sir John Egerton's cause was heard in the Court of Wards and a case made of it which will not long be undecided. Mr Needham is likely to be dismissed from that court and to be undone, for it is thought there is no hope for him to prevail. This is the last news John Wynn has heard. Could not but write to William Maurice, having found such a convenient messenger, although he was in haste to meet a gentleman this morning and ready to take horse. Postscript: Does not know

	whether the marriage proceeds. The Palgrave's title is: 'The high and mihty Prince Fredericke, the fift by the grace of God Counte Pallatyn of the Rhein, Duke of Bavaria: Elector of the same, vicar therof, etc.' He was born at 'Amberg' in his upper Pallatinate on 16 Aug. 1596. Clenennau letters and papers 280. vtls005594197 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Whitehall, to [Ralph Eure], Lord Eure, Lord President of Wales and Lieutenant ..., Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Privy Council (named), at the Court at Whitehall, to [Ralph Eure], Lord Eure, Lord President of Wales and Lieutenant of the Counties of Wales and the Marches. The peace enjoyed since the King came to the crown has bred security and neglect of necessary provisions for war; suspect there has been a great decay in the arms and equipment requisite in a well ordered state for continued peace. The ease of timely provision thereof since it causes less expense and trouble may induce every man to equip himself as necessary to serve the state and prevent the inconveniences which follow neglect. But the times are such both in respect of the recent boldness of the recusants and other causes requiring a ready supply in this behalf, that the King has commanded the Council to order a general muster and survey to be made and certified of the armed forces of the realm and any defects therein to be supplied, which command	1612/13, Jan. 31.

	should be swiftly executed since it is intended not only for the safety of the realm but also to ease each man's trouble which would be much greater if it were left to a sudden necessity. Require Ralph Eure to have a general view made of all the forces, both horse and foot, and to have notice taken and enrolment made of all the numbers, trained and untrained, and especially to see the trained bands made complete, replacing officers or others who are dead, unsuitable or have gone away since previous musters with suitable men such as freeholders, 'ffermors', owners of land or householders. Let him also have defects of armour, weapons and equipment repaired and the numbers of horse, doubtless much deficient, if not increased, at least made as complete as hitherto with arms, equipment and horsemen. If any persons excuse themselves from this duty upon pretence of being servants of the King or any nobleman or peer, or thereby seeks to avoid the charge of providing horses, arms or equipment as charged, let Ralph Eure see that no such persons be exempted except those known to be the King's ordinary servants in court and household servants to noblemen. Others who are only extraordinary or retainers should be charged at the musters and other public services like others of like ability and should send arms and equipment or horses as charged, to be viewed with the rest of the counties. At the general view, it will be expedient for those charged to find arms and others fit to be charged, to be ordered to show them at the musters. Hope the justices of the peace will not be sparing in sending horses, equipment and servants to the musters, but rather do so eagerly for the furtherance of the service and as an example to others so that the musters may be taken with as little trouble to the country as possible. Each division should be mustered apart so that men do not have to travel far for their assembly or continue in the service for longer than necessary. But this abuse has been found hitherto when the musters have been so divided, that some persons, not having provided arms and equipment as charged, have borrowed them from others to serve for their view thereby themselves avoiding the charge. For the prevention thereof the musters in the several divisions should be taken all on one day if possible, otherwise Ralph Eure should take the best order he can for the redress thereof. It was ordered in former directions that in certain places a quantity of powder be kept as a store with match bullets and other provisions for a carriage, always ready for service, which the Council suppose are defective. Require Ralph Eure to have the store supplied and kept serviceable. Let him charge persons of suitable ability in the counties to repair the decay and replace what has been used as necessary, and let him see the store kept in the shire towns or such other towns as he thinks suitable for its safe keeping and not in a dangerous place subject to surprise by ill-disposed persons. Further require him, since the beacons in the counties have been long neglected, to see them quickly repaired and made ready to use if required. Lastly let all directions for the good order of the forces or otherwise concerning the strength of the country be observed; let him have special regard thereof and certify the Council without fail by 1 April of the views and musters, showing the defects, how they were supplied and all other proceedings relating to the service. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 280. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Covering letter with No. 280. What Ralph Eure cannot attend or perform in person rests on his deputies. The letters express the King's care for the general good rather than any immediate known cause of danger, but such frequent directions as Ralph Eure has received in three letters over the last two months, must proceed from extraordinary causes, especially when they are so general, and in the case of the musters, throughout the kingdom. When the ill-affected or suspect, such as the Papists, should be disarmed for fear of danger, so the loyal should be equipped for their own safety. Recommends this service, which is important and admits to delay, to their care and swift performance. If any are obstinate, being insensible of the inconvenience that may be or neglectful of their duty or the deputy lieutenants' commands, let the latter proceed against them at their own discretion or bind them over to answer for their contempt

	before Ralph Eure. Let the deputy lieutenants use their authority according to the trust reposed in them and the necessity of the service. Hopes former directions have made good provision for things of this kind; any lack in the persons of the men or their arms, horses and equipment or the store of match and powder must now be supplied. Requires the captains of the bonds [sic for bands] to be summoned before the deputy lieutenants with their companies, both horse and foot, and that the muster masters be there, attending also to the allowing or disallowing of arms. Leaves to the deputy lieutenants' choice the day, place and manner of the musters, whether all in one day or in one place, but the time must be between 12 and 17 March so that Ralph Eure may have their certificates before 28 March; must return his own certificate, which must be particular with regard to defects and supplies, by 31 March. To press the deputy lieutenants further would be to doubt their diligence; yet cannot but say that his former directions have not produced due satisfaction. Their own discretion and the enclosed instructions will show them what is requisite. Authorises them fully to act in his absence; let them discharge this duty in fitting manner. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 281. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The words 'ill affected Religion', being general and subject to various constructions, have caused uncertainty in various counties as to the King's meaning therein; he, with the Council's advice and the opinion of the country's chief judges, explains it thus. His meaning is to deal not only with convicted recusants but with any who may be suspected of ill-affection in religion, including those who do not attend church frequently to hear divine service without a just cause such as sickness or some other impediment, those who for the last three or four years have not received communion at least once a year and those who have wives, children or servants who are recusants, non-communicants or otherwise known to be popishly affected, or have an extraordinary number of retainers or tenants who are recusants or non-communicants. Those being persons whom the King and state have reason to 'hould in jealousy', the Council, at the King's command, requires Ralph Eure to deal with them as he was directed in former letters to deal with convicted recusants. Refer Ralph Eure to the said letters, assuring themselves that his care and endeavours will equal the King's good opinion of his loyalty and willingness to serve him.

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Excuses himself for not calling at Clennennau on his way home; was informed at Penmorfa that William Maurice had gone to Bangor to meet the Justices and the news from William Maurice's grandchild Mrs Owen was so slender as not to be worth delivering or hearing. Thomas Owen's business with his own affairs, especially his commission, is such that he hardly has time to come to William Maurice. Tried all his wits and 'tost them like a tonnys ball' but could not draw 'her' to a compromise in the differences between 'you'. Urged that good would redound to her if she listened to William Maurice's counsel and referred the present odds to William Maurice's courtesy and that prejudice daily grew by their division, instancing Robert ap John ap Humfrey's recovery etc. If there were no great hindrance except her consent, by reason of the reversion, [urged her] to join William Maurice in a reconciliation. She answered that she knew no cause of difference on her part; if there were any, it was on William Maurice's. As for the titles they wholly concerned William Maurice's being in possession, etc. She hoped William Maurice would do his utmost for his own good to preserve his ancient estate from impeachment without cause or title which if there be, she hopes William Maurice will take the best course to an agreement, believing that there is no adverse party in those titles that would not rather lose than stand out with William Maurice. She further hopes William Maurice will rather do her good than any hindrance to the maintenance of herself and eight children, whom in Thomas Owen's opinion she brings up well. She will be ready at William Maurice's command, embracing his blessing, to show him all kind offices, and to come to the county on good terms. Understands William Maurice has 'compromitted' once again the matter between him and Robert ap John ap Humfrey. Confesses he is in Henry Johnes's debt and will repay him as soon as he can. Entreats William Maurice's patience at this time and will pay for them; if he could get money for anything at this time William Maurice would not have sent for them. Had a hundred pounds' worth of cattle to sell and could not [...] for them and therefore is forced to keep them until May. Asks for an acquittance for his mother's £300 and £20 for last year. Will see William Maurice himself after the holidays and will do his best for William Maurice's money. William Maurice wrote for a gelding for Henry Johnes's mother; has no horse that is quiet enough for her to ride. Wishes to be remembered to Sir William Thomas and his lady, desiring him to pardon Henry Johnes for withholding his own from him, but will pay the money. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: His lordship insisted on sending the bearer with a letter to William Maurice to know his mind concerning William Brinkir's proceeding in the Llaniestyn business. For his own part, would not for any good in the world seem to draw William Maurice to anything against his will; has always found William Maurice herefore readier to help him than he can ever requite. Told his lordship William Maurice was disappointed of a great sum of money so that he could not help William Brinkir as William Brinkir's matter to fee lawyers and procure sergeant's opinions next term requires. If he has possession as he hopes, the benefice will be worth £100 at least between now and Michaelmas. Would rather have William Maurice manage his fortune than any other even if he had thirty pounds less than from another, but would not have William Maurice strain himself for what he cannot conveniently do for the living. Asks William Maurice to write his mind calmly to his lordship and 'let it fale out as it may deus providebit'. Told his lordship William Maurice had done nothing in his conference with Mr Jones except in relation to his lordship, but he expected mention to have been made thereof in the writing or William Maurice to have informed him by letter. Mr Chauncler is at his benefice in Denbighshire; Mr Jones goes away next Thursday. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 288. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 289. vtls005594207 ISYSARCHB54	File - H[enry Rowlands, bishop of] Bangor, 1613, April 4. Bangor, to Sir William Maurice, kt, one of the lieutenants of Caernarfonshire, Clenennau, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: William Maurice having 'appointed the field and made the challenge', will now not meet. In the 'parle' at Henry Rowlands's house, with Mr Jones and the other side, William Maurice was the first to provoke them to a compromise by sergeants and Henry Rowlands was pleased that William Maurice made that flourish while he limited the judgement and final order to Sir Edward Cooke as umpire. But at Caernarvon without Henry Rowlands's privity William Maurice subscribed to three sergeants in which he was overweighed by Mr Jones, who is better acquainted with sergeants; William Maurice was the more overseen since he did it without reference to Henry Rowlands. Is loth to drive the hatred to himself as a peace breaker in William Maurice's conformity. Both sides will never agree on the sergeants and the compromise will fall of itself. Touching the main cause, Mr Jones, though Henry Rowlands finds him inclined to the other side, makes it doubtful and does not brag at all of the issue, for the church is likely to be favoured in so unconscionable a matter. But Mr Lloyd, Henry Rowlands & William Maurice's friend by his cousin Brynkir's relation, makes it a clear case for 'him', which requires no great charge in law, in his belief that Mr Jones speaks for the other side out of favour and inclination to discourage Henry Rowlands and William Maurice more than out of judgment in law. The weakness of Henry Rowlands and William Maurice is that 'they' have full purses on a dead man's charge to follow the business whereas Henry Rowlands and William Maurice are poor and weak which 'they' observe well enough, and it makes 'them' confident. But William Maurice delivered great words before 'them' in Henry Rowlands's presence; it pleased Henry Rowlands that their heavy purses should not so easily carry the matter, and that William Maurice would spend himself therein before being wronged or overweighed. Of this Henry Rowlands is witness and does not doubt that William Maurice will do the same. William Maurice said he would be in London next term to manage the business himself; otherwise it was a great oversight to refer it to three sergeants and two counsellors. The journey in Henry Rowlands's opinion would be well worthwhile. For his part, Henry Rowlands is one and the same. If William Maurice sticks to 'him' and assists 'him' auxilio et consilio, will not forsake 'him'. But for Henry Rowlands to bestow the living and bear the charge of the suit is more than William Maurice thought fit. Therefore writes to William Maurice, in Henry Rowlands's cousin Brynkir's discouragement, to know his resolution, so that otherwise Henry Rowlands may ease 'him' and rid himself of the business with as much credit as he can. Let William Maurice look what he thinks good; Henry Rowlands is indifferent and inclinable, though it would have been more to their credit had it never been talked of. But it is but a money matter

	and William Maurice has spent money worse and more idly many times. Henry Rowlands wishes that William Maurice will be in London next term if required. Postscript: William Maurice forgot to send the tenth of Llanbeblig, namely 20s.4. William Jones goes to London on Thursday. Henry Rowlands is surprised that William Maurice did not write to Henry Rowlands what he requires of him; hopes William Maurice will now do so. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 289. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Hopes therefore that William Maurice will not blame him for not coming to Eifionydd. It would be a comfort to William Maurice's friends and neighbours if he spent his latter days among them in tranquillity of mind, out of contention and litigiousness. Does not doubt that William Maurice will embrace this course when due occasion is offered. Meanwhile let him ply his business courageously, unswayed by his enemies; let him spare no cost - 'crede mihi res est ingenissa dare'. William Maurice lately suffered a 'foyle' before the Council; it could not be otherwise since William Maurice's course was unwise and done in heat. William Maurice must pay £31.13.4 by 20 March next to falsify Justice Barker's report of his careless payments. [?Mores] and the other two fellows would have stood by it still if Thomas Owen and Richard Gruff of Tregarneth had not been there - they had to stay for three days. William Maurice's solicitor Gruff Jones played the part of an honest man, and would have done better under any other attorney than John Powell, 'who is like to goe down the weather'. Requests William Maurice at his leisure to talk with the Lord Mayor's son on Thomas Owen's behalf, for the Mayor will perhaps be busy, condoling with him for his wife's decease, which Thomas Owen hears he takes heavily. Let William Maurice ask them to deal well with Thomas Owen, reminding the Mayor how Mr Williams the goldsmith escaped Thomas Owen by the Mayor's failure to pass the assurance to Williams, which caused Thomas Owen much trouble and expense. If necessary, would try to come up to deal with them upon reasonable notice from William Maurice, especially if William Maurice finds them willing to give him fully what he should have had from Mr Williams as 'he', Thomas Owen's brother, his cousin John Wynne Bodvyan, now in London, and his cousin Humfrey Jones can say. Spoke to Mr Middleton about it last summer, when the latter was in the country. Because of Thomas Owen's 'arrearages' to the Mayor and others, cannot live at Plas Du long 'in any good fashion', because of his last 'lawying' with Mr Williams, of which he hopes the Mayor will have some feeling. Has no stock to furnish his grounds, and is driven to find all necessities from his corn. Has lately been subject, like William Maurice, to 'sundry casualties' from 'combrous neighbours without any color of right or truth', which costs backward a man of mean estate. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 293. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Must reasonably answer for what comes into his hands, but any money received has come to him so lately that it did not need to be called for so soon by William Maurice, for the matter did not concern him [William Maurice] privately, nor yet hindered him. Only he calls William Thomas to account and none of the other lieutenants who have better reason to do so; if William Thomas never received good from William Maurice, yet the latter ought not to oppose it. Means the use of the 'Countrey - money' which William Thomas might have for a certain time as long as others who have more reason to call him to reckoning than William Maurice tolerate it. Does not mean to have remittance of a penny of the mise money due; for 'it standeth me only upon to discharge the same and noe body els'. Though he cannot have acquittance without performance, expects forbearance, especially from his friends, which makes him take the matter more unkindly at William Maurice's hands. Will as willingly take William Maurice's ware, namely powder, match and bullets, and pay him therefor in convenient time at William Maurice's convenience, as he would elsewhere of another, but to do it 'upon the sudden' or when the money has just been received, or is not even yet received in some places - thence proceeds his complaint. If William Thomas had the money he received (which shall duly be used for the purpose it was raised for), would send it to William Maurice, for he expects to gain only a little by it and does not intend otherwise but to 'cope' with William Maurice, having leisure to look about him. But perhaps if it were William Maurice who had received this money, since he has already some ammunition and had other occasion to ride to London, William Maurice would have been well content to perform this business at the best opportunity and it would have been a good while before William Thomas would have summoned him to it. So delivers his grief, wishing that he had the money to content William Maurice and ease himself. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 294. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The Council sent letters date 30 June 1613 to Ralph Eure for numbers of foot as set down below, of the ablest men, not in the trained bands, to be prepared and made ready in the counties named and to cause them to be provided with armour and weapons such as are usually used for the service of the kingdom so that they may be ready to receive allowance for coats and conduct whenever the King uses them. The Council, while not doubting that Ralph Eure has had due care and regard as behoves him in a business of such importance to the King's service, lest anything be conceived to the prejudice of the service by intermission and length of time, have thought meet to renew their former directions and to require Ralph Eure to cause them to be executed in all points, not knowing how soon the King may make use of their service, and swiftly to give order to his deputy lieutenants for this purpose, sending them a copy of the letter. Some part of that estate is common to William Morice as he best knows. But since she is unwilling to have any dealings in law with William Morice, Owen Vaughan, as he would be ready to do for William Morice within his quarters if required, must entreat William Morice to give her satisfaction and contentment from himself and the other parties by a friendly arbitrable end, such as may answer the equity of her demand, so that she is not forced to use the law. She will be very thankful and Owen Vaughan will be ready to acknowledge the same or any kindness William Morice does her. Clennau letters and papers 305. vtls005594224 ISYSARCHB54	File - Andrew Brereton to Sir William Moris, kt, one of the lieutenants of Caernarfonshire, 1615, May 6. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: About 1 Feb., Mr Moris, vicar of Llanbeblig and Caernarvon, in William Moris's name and his own, commenced a suit in Bangor and put in a libel against an old widow, a tenant of Andrew Brereton's and sometime of Lord Puleston, William Moris's father-in-law. The libel challenges hay tithes from the widow for this year, but Andrew Brereton will tell William Moris the truth of the matter, as three of the widow's sons, one of whom is the bearer, are ready to depose over a book. There is an accustomed tithe from the meadow to the person of Llanbeblig and the vicar thereof, and every year it was duly paid without any controversy. This last year the widow's sons duly and justly tithed the meadow leaving every tenth where it fell, some in water and some out. The tithe men came to the meadow to gather their tithe; finding the widow's sons there making up their hay out of the water and seeing their tithe in the wet ground, they were unwilling to wet their feet, but, being townsmen, had rather wet their bellies with good ale and made a motion to the widow's sons that they should have a certain piece of the meadow standing in dry ground for all their tithe thereof. Two of the younger brothers answered that they might not grant them the parcel of meadow but said, "You may go to our elder brother (who is the bearer) and speak with him", whereupon they did. Upon much entreaty, he granted their request for other years. The parcel of ground was given for the tithe; now it was a bargain. The widow's sons were to mow and cut the parcel of meadow within three days after, but it fell out that they mowed it the same day, and presently came foul weather. The tithe men, busy in the Quarter Sessions, neglected their hay and the spoiling thereof. When they came to make it up as their own, one of them, Harry ap Robert ap Hughe, said "I will never take the pains to gather it but had rather claim Bangor for my help". 'Well ther the hea was left in the ground by ther own neclegence'. Sometime after Harry ap Robert came to Andrew Brereton and complained about the widow, Andrew Brereton's tenant, about the tithe, whereupon Andrew Brereton called the widow and her sons and they answered as he has written. Meeting with this Harry, Andrew Brereton told him the widow's answer. Then he was willing to take two horse loads of hay for all tithe but since it was a bargain between them the widow would not give any more but her due. Now the vicar has only the third part of this; a 'pown' of hay was sold then for 14d., [recte 24d.] so for the value of 8d. he troubled an honest woman to Bangor and has already made her spend more money that the tithe came to. Requests William Moris not to show himself in the matter but to write to the Chancellor to stay it from further proceeding. If the vicar stands, does not doubt that he will be overthrown. It rather proceeds from some other spleen than for hope of gain in the matter. Every year Andrew Brereton tithes the corn himself for fear that there should be any want, but has no part in the hay; hereafter as long as he is in the ground, will see that also

The Earl of Somerset is committed to the Dean of Westminster, with Sir Oliver St John appointed as his keeper, and Lady Somerset is confined to Lord Knollys's house, great with child and near her time. Mrs Turner, a gentlewoman of Lady Somerset, is committed to the sheriff of London. Whiteackers, a gentleman of the Earl of Somerset, is committed. Weston, a fellow preferred by Mrs Turner's means to the lieutenant of the Tower, was appointed to wait on Sir Thomas Overburie when he lived a prisoner in the Tower. This man was examined and confessed to have received by the hands of some of the above named three or four sorts of poison which he gave Overbury, of which he died; [Weston] had for his reward £200. This fellow is indicted for poisoning him [Overbury], and upon his arraignment stands mute and refuses ordinary trial. Time will discover more. Mallory and Massy are competitors for the bishopric of Chester. Massy is too strong and has taken a better way. Has fulfilled the business therein commanded by William Maurice as nearly as he could. The time was short for William Maurice's bill in chancery against William Lewes Anwyl and Hugh ap Edward and for William Maurice's other process against Robert ap John ap Humffrey. Brought them to Mr Humffry Lloyd, William Maurice's proctor, who could do nothing until the Monday ten days after the receipt of William Maurice's letter, for there was no court day before. He will then do what he can therein. As for the presentment and his confession, which Dr Lloyd had, put them in court and an excommunication was granted, but before it was sealed, Dr Rydle, who sits under the vicar general in that court, received a letter from Mr Puleston of Emrall on behalf of Robert ap John ap Humffrey and by that means it was stayed. Mr Brynkir labours what he can in that behalf. Cannot tell William Maurice to how it will prove. William Maurice's cause against Sir Richard Bulkley is to be tried next term as William ap William has written to William Maurice in former letters. They sued out a writ of destringas a decem tales and that is returnable on 30 Jan. at the Exchequer bar as aforesaid. If William Maurice follows Mr John Lloyd's directions he will not fail to be at the trial himself for his own credit. Has no other news to write to William Maurice but what he and Mr Brynkir have written before except that the Lord Chamberlain is committed to the tower and Sir Thomas Hawart to the Fleet for some speeches he uttered. Sir George Moor is lieutenant of the Tower, Lord Pembroke, as men think, will be Chamberlain and Lord Essex Master of the King's Horse. This is the rumour; does not know how it will fall. As for the cause against John ap Hoell ap Owen and others, calls on William Maurice's attorneys and counsellors daily. William Maurice asks the price of spices; both pepper and sugar have risen. Pepper is 2s.8 a pound and sugar 17d. or 18d. Clenennau letters and papers 316. vtls005594235 ISYSARCHB54	File - Ralph [Eure, Lord] Eure, Ludlow Castle, to his friend Sir William Maurice, kt, 1615, Nov. 27.	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Understands by the bearer, Ralph Eure's servant Robert Winne, that William Maurice seeks to vex the latter by a multiplicity of causeless suits, and unjustly, as he alleges, disturbs him in the possession of those lands which William Maurice knows and acknowledges he lately recovered by order of law, and that William Maurice in Robert Winne's absence has ploughed up some of those lands. Either Robert Winne must rest satisfied to be prejudiced in the right of his inheritance or otherwise in the defence thereof, breach of the peace and the hazard of further mischiefs is likely to ensue. Though Ralph Eure could interpose his authority for the prevention of both of these courses, and judicially order it, he had rather that on his motion and out of respect for him, William Maurice as deputy lieutenant and Robert Winne as his servant will in some friendly manner compromise the suits and differences between them,

	since they are such near neighbours and kindred, to friends chosen by both of them; Ralph Eure will willingly become umpire if they differ. Until William Maurice accords thus, or Ralph Eure receives an answer from him by letter and knows his resolution, asks William Maurice to cease both his suits before Sir Daniell Dunne, since the parties between whome 'those broiles' were are now by Ralph Eure's medication agreed, and to forbear these violent courses which Robert Winne complains William Maurice attempts upon his land. In this Ralph Eure cannot but inform him that he expected a more befitting respect, if not towards Robert Winne, yet towards Ralph Eure, from William Maurice. Having formerly endeavoured an end in the differences between them and settled a peaceable course, Ralph Eure had thought before William Maurice had undertaken these suits of charge (will not say vexation) in London, and these forcible entries here in the country, that William Maurice would either have acquainted William Maurice with his purposes, or have made known to William Maurice that the occasions were offered by Robert Winne, wherein Ralph Eure could have presently ordered Robert Winne to make satisfaction, if he had been faulted. But finds, having lately enquired of the proceedings in that business, that the jury had no sufficient evidence to find for Gruffydd Hughes's predecessors all the lands which they did, though they had good evidence to find them all except some part of Erw y Sain. If Gruffydd Hughes had understood this sooner, would not have stood in his present proceedings in law, but would have been ready to join William Maurice in a commission or any other method upon which they agreed to find the truth of what is due to each of them. Is now willing and ready to do so, if William Maurice likes that course and will stay his suit so that there are no more proceedings therein, in the hope that they may agree otherwise. Upon William Maurice's return from London, will attend him wherever he pleases on the last notice. Knows William Maurice does not desire the travail of Gruffydd Hughes's body or the expenses of his money in suits of law, but only [to obtain] his own, which God willing, he shall have at Gruffydd Hughes's hands without suits upon true information. Will do her best to accomplish all his wishes therein about Harlech Fair. William Mauris's tenants complain for money because the weather is so extreme. Has not yet received the money from her cousin John Wyne of Bodruon; her cousin Rowland Griffith sets forth for South Wales today, the 24th, and she charges him to do his best to get William Mauris's money without fail. As for the garreg velen, set half the tenement to Cadwalader ap John as he says William Mauris promised; he will refer to William Mauris for the rent. The other half they keep until William Mauris comes home. As for cevene a meicedd, no-one dwells there yet, for the fellow who intended to come there took a great dislike to see it so decayed. Her cousin Moris Johns come to London; she will be very glad if William Mauris can agree with him and wishes it with all her heart, for the place is good and convenient. The award has come home by John Thomas Wytte and is with William Mauris's lady. The report is that it is not of William Mauris's side as he is to blame to trust any of them. 'My lady' and Anne Wen Brinkyr's cousin Jane Griffith are well, but William Mauris's brother Robert has not been half well since William Mauris went away. Anne Wen Brinkyr's daughter Margret Brinkyr was today brought to bed of a girl. The bishop of Bangor is not half well. Mr Williams the owner of the great ship at Barmouth went home a week ago, and Anne Wen Brinkyr had £23 worth of corn, wine and cloth from him. Was eager to pay him before he went, which he had before the time appointed. He means to return soon. Postscript: Sent to her cousin Roberd Lloyd to see if he would provide William Mauris's money

William Moris said if Henry Johnes did not pay him, he would be drawn to give him another name; Henry Johnes's name is well known, and he hopes not to give William Moris cause to forget it. Will content William Moris shortly with all possible speed of the money he owes him. William Moris threatens to sue him - William Moris will only hinder Henry Johnes and do himself no good by making Henry Johnes spend his money in law. Will make as much haste as he can to pay, and therefore entreats William Moris not to put him in suit, for he will find Henry Johnes's dealings honest with him. Begs William Moris to let few words [] between them, being father and son; desires William Moris to let Henry Johnes's letter prevail with him and entreats his patience for this time. When Eline David paid for a room to burn lime, he caused her to be expelled and put out, and further interrupted Eline David from making a kill where Mr Sheriff appointed. To make a full rehearsal would be too tedious to trouble William Morys; no-one comes to her to buy except Mr Sheriff. Began to make a kill which was no small charge to her and he charged her not to finish it for he knew of no authority which she or her husband had. Begs William Morys to support her and to do whatever he thinks good for she has a hundred pecks of lime at Llanfaglan and Caernarvon and cannot sell one since he causes many to say that she has none. Clenennau letters and papers 326. vtls005594246 ISYSARCHB54	File - [REV.] William Brinkir, Hart Hall, to his uncle Sir William Maurice, kt, Clenennau, 1616, Aug. 1. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Wishes to be remembered to William Maurice, her ladyship and his father and mother. Has no leisure because of the messenger's haste to write to them. Hopes his father has recovered from his sickness and that they are all well at Clenennau. Came up to London hoping to have something of the Lord Chancellor after the bishop of Bangor's death, but it was all gone and promised a month before he came. Lord Pembroke wrote a very earnest, kind letter on William Brinkir's behalf to the Chancellor about Aberdaron, and spoke most effectually in William Brinkir's hearing to Sir John Egerton to move his father that William Brinkir might have it, with a promise of far greater kindness for any friend of Sir John's if it stood in his lordship's power to perform it. The Lord Chancellor had already given his promise to one of his own chaplains and could not recall it, but he told William Brinkir that he would willingly please him thereafter in anything he could and that he would satisfy his lordship therewith. Dr Williams of Rhuthun and Dr Lewis, who was with William Maurice at Clenennau, and one Dr [Lewis] Bayly, who once lived with her ladyship at Abermarlais, stand for 'our' bishopric. It is not yet known who will have it; will write to William Maurice as soon as he hears of any certainty. Has no news to write. Postscript: A stationer of London sent this book, which is a speech by the King, to William Maurice. Clenennau letters and papers 327. vtls005594247 ISYSARCHB54	File - [Sir] William Maurice, Clenennau, to Sir Thomas Chamberlen, Chief Justice in the Marches of Wales, 1616, Aug. 28. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Is very sorry that he is compelled to write, for he is unable to come himself as he wished, to salute Thomas Chamberlen at the Marches as general chief justice for Wales, though he is sorry for his departure. Informs Thomas Chamberlen of two 'harde accidentes' which happened to William Maurice in Ludlow when he met Thomas Chamberlen and Sir Frances Euere, the present justice. Firstly, William Maurice in good faith and hope of good dealings as promised, 'comprimetted' the matter he had in law against his neighbour Robert Wynn to the order of the Lord President, Sir Richard Lewkener and Sir Harry Toneshede who never came together to hear him. All that was done was before the Lord President only, with Thomas Chamberlen and Sir Francis Ewer present. William Maurice disclaimed his submission of any trial except before Thomas Chamberlen, the then justice, in the county, as Thomas Chamberlen knows, and the President then seemed to give it over to Thomas Chamberlen, which William Maurice hopes Thomas Chamberlen remembers. But in William Maurice's absence the President and Sir Harry, who had never heard his cause, made this award, charging William Maurice most unjustly with the payment of 20 marks of money and barring him from seeking remedy by law except in the county and that also partially tying William Maurice and leaving him [Robert Wynn] free for a second trial of the cause. Has sent the award by the bearer to show Thomas Chamberlen; if the latter has leisure to peruse it, would be very glad. The second harde happ' was to be bound for his kinsman Rowlande ap Elissee with the latter's son-in-law for a sum of £50 imposed on him, to save from further punishment. The son-in-law promised to discharge William Maurice but did not. Process came from the sheriff upon his bond for £29 which should have been paid at Midsummer. William Maurice was then in London and now sends the money, desiring Thomas Chamberlen's favour that it may be accepted for this payment; will bring the next himself in convenient time. Postscript relating to Sir William Maurice's dispute with Robert Wynn. Draft, in the hand of Sir William Maurice. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Besides they had Sir Harry's letter causing him to pay a [...] of London and that man's acquittance to show that he received the money by Sir Price to the use of Sir Harry Jones. Mr John opened the cause and pleaded a long while, which prevailed to the worst. William ap William could not help it; there was no defeat in anything that lay in him to do. Touching William Maurice's direction for William ap William to join in commission with Mr Williams, it could not be done without preferring a bill in the Exchequer Chamber. As soon as Lord Cook heard, he took his horses and went to the country. Delivered William Maurice's letter to him and he enquired how William Maurice did. One of the masters of Chancery, whose name was Sir John Tindall, was shot with a pistol while going from his coach to his chambers in Lincoln's Inn by an old man of 60 years with whom he dealt very hardly; the old fellow hanged himself in prison. If William Maurice continues his intended course, as Henry Johnes hopes he will not, considering the many great sums he has received from Henry Johnes, William Maurice will more than hinder Henry Johnes than at first that little could please him. Now is a dear time to provide money and Henry Johnes has parted with great sums and craves William Maurice's forbearance. William Maurice shall find him as unwilling to be asked a penny by any man as now he is unable to satisfy William Maurice unless he much hinders himself. If he is driven to that extremity, must attribute it to his fortune to be no more esteemed by those who should by nature better care and further his good. There was no such undutiful disobedience to William Maurice's lawful authority in levying the mise, or the King's will and pleasure to that imposition, as William Maurice unjustly suggested in his answer. Thomas Owen's letter is, if William Maurice peruses it more fully, 'all the harme it expressed'; he made bold, like a blind bayard, to remind William Maurice of some public opposition thereto, which causes others of more tractability to be the more backward. William Maurice shall find that all Thomas Owen's late tenants, now tenants to Sir Thomas Middleton, conformed with Thomas Owen's advice and persuasion and as ready to pay it as any of William Maurice's, which Thomas Owen thinks deserved William Maurice's gentle forbearance, money being scarce, rather than his 'bitter snapp' to his poor nephew, who endeavours to be as little trouble to him as he can, and as faithfully forward to do him any pleasure or service he can, as any kinsman he has. A word or two on behalf of the bearer, Thomas Owen's hired servant, whose father has been a very long time in durance. 7s.6 of this mise was cessed a long time ago on him and his mother, being only poor of stock, but who held lands in their own occupation. But since the first of May last they demised all the lands to two other men, who since dwell there and occupy the lands. They had 2s.10 cessed on them since May last and duly paid it. Asks William Maurice's pardon for not answering him to the full by this bearer because of some sudden extraordinary business he has in hand which he undertook the day William Maurice's letter came, namely, to preach at St Mary's Oxford next Sunday for Dr Price. Will write at large to all William Maurice's demands and satisfy them to the utmost by the next that comes down, which he hopes will be within a week. Meanwhile begs William Maurice to excuse him and to desire William Brinkir's mother, from whom he received two 'great' letters, partly of expostulation that he had not written before and partly about other business, to excuse him for not writing at this time for he has almost no leisure to read her letters, 'much more' to answer them as exactly as he wishes, for they contain some things wherein he longs to give her satisfaction but cannot possibly at this time. Had hoped his father was recovered but understands the contrary; hopes he is out of danger. His cousin Mr William Glyn, Llyar, has been desperately sick in Oxford for almost a fortnight. Once they had small hope of his recovery, for the physician had given him up, but now he is well recovered. Lord Cook is to satisfy the King on some great points between now and Michaelmas; will hear of them all within a few days and will send William Maurice a copy. Used what means he could for Aberdaron to the Lord Chancellor - such means that he might have carried a better thing: will inform William Maurice later why he missed it. Begs William Maurice not to be offended with him for his brevity and asks him to persuade William Brinkir's mother not to be offended because he does not answer her letters, which he will do as soon as he can. Does not yet know how Dr Bayly, the bishop, and he, will agree, but hopes all will be well. Dr Price and Dr Lewis commend themselves to William Maurice. The King, Queen and Prince were at Woodstock for six days and the favourite Mr George Villers was made Viscount Villers there, and is to be created earl of some place or other at the instalment of the Prince at about the beginning of Nov. Has no other news to write at this time, except that there is likely to be a great stir in France between the peers and the Queen Regent. The Prince of 'Curdy' is taken prisoner and the rest of the nobility stand upon their guard. There are great matters and news expected from them which William Brinkir cannot deliver. Clenennau letters and papers 340.	File - [REV.] Maurice Robyns, 1617, April 19. Caernarvon, to Sir William Maurice, kt, Clenennau,

vtls005594260 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Received William Maurice's letter together with which William Maurice sent William Lacone a letter which Maurice Robyns had written long ago to William Maurice touching him, which Maurice Robyns neither can nor will deny, whatever it contains. William Maurice further writes that Maurice Robyns should deal honestly with him because he did not send William ap William hither. Desires William Maurice's men and all others with whom Maurice Robyns has dealt to lay what dishonesty they are able to his charge. Seeks only his own, and very often has much ado to come by it. William Maurice writes that Maurice Robyns countenanced his kinsman to abuse Marie Gruffythe; it is not so, for neither did he abuse her, as Sir William Thomas and Sir Richard Gwynne, who had the examining of the matter, can tell, nor did Maurice Robyns countenance him in that or any other unlawful action. Would have William Maurice think that 'all is not gospell that they speake', as is very well known to most in the town. When the matter is tried, it shall then be known who is wronged and foully abused, both in the church at prayers and sacrament time and abroad, by Marie and her sister, so that Maurice Robyns cannot be permitted quietly to read prayers or administer the sacrament without interruption. Were it not that they look to be countenanced by William Maurice, as appears by his letter to the Chancellor, by their report, it would be otherwise, for the minister should be of all places quiet in the church and especially at prayer time. Trusts that when the bishop comes, he will see all these misdemeanours and their like severely punished, for Maurice Robyns must tell William Maurice 'for a truthe upon good prooffe', that Marie Gruffythe did not stick to speak ill of all the clergy in generall, terming them 'develes and blacke dogges', words worthy of extreme punishment. Thinks that whoever bolsters her in these words shall find enough to do, and the bishop will without doubt think the worse of him and will perhaps inflict great punishment upon the offenders. Long may he [the bishop] be in health, for Maurice Robyns hears very honourably of him, that he will not see any of the poor ministers of his diocese abused, as long as they behave themselves honestly in their calling, although nowadays they are little set by. The bishop will defend their honest cause against rich or poor. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 340. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Begg William Maurice to be mindful of him; his means are very small and his father is a poor man, unable to provide for him, having already pinched himself to bring John Davies to that learning to which he has already attained. Is therefore driven to come to William Maurice for succour, as his chief refuge next to God, not doubting that William Maurice, according to his wonted care for others of John Davies's state, will remember him when the bishop comes. Meanwhile craves pardon for his boldness, with continual prayers for the health and prosperity of William Maurice and 'my good ladie'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 341. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 342. vtls005594262 ISYSARCHB54	File - [Sir] William Maurice to his friend [the REV.] Maurice Robbins, vicar and curate of Caernarvon and Llanbeblig, 1617, April 29. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Wrote his mind plainly to Maurice Robbins and sent Maurice Robbins's letter to William Lacon as a caveat to warn him to deal well with Maurice Robbins and William Maurice. Wrote to Maurice Robbins to deal honestly, which William Maurice does not doubt that he will, and allowed him [William Lacon] to deal for William Maurice this time, so that either of them may look to the other. Would not have Maurice Robbins consider, though William Maurice wrote to him to deal honestly, which is a kind speech to be spoken to anyone, that he therefore charges Maurice Robbins with any dishonesty. As Maurice Robbins, as he says, seeks only his own, so is it reasonable also that William Maurice seeks his own. Desires to be a mean for them both therein. Knows he is much behind every year and thinks Maurice Robbins may be also. So much of that matter. As to the second part of Maurice Robbins's letter touching his [Maurice Robbins's] kinsman, if William Maurice was truly informed, he must think as he said. Will understand the matter when he comes to the Quarter Sessions; wherever the fault was, it is worthy of punishment. How William Maurice's cousin Marye Gruffith should be so troublesome to Maurice Robbins at service time, a thing most unlawful, he does not know, unless upon some abuse offered her. As William Maurice said, upon due examination of the cause the truth shall be known and the offender censured accordingly. Maurice Robbins writes that they expect countenance at William Maurice's hands, as William Maurice wrote to the Chancellor, or else it would be otherwise. What Maurice Robbins means thereby William Maurice does not know, for if Maurice Robbins means to do them wrong, William Maurice will countenance them in their right, but if otherwise, they shall have no countenance of William Maurice in their wrongs or any other misbehaviour. Maurice Robbins knows William Maurice has and will further God's service to the utmost, and the order of the church, which he saw Maurice Robbins neglect sometimes. As Maurice Robbins said, so William Maurice hopes, that when the bishop comes they shall have all things in good order. Touching the words which Maurice Robbins says that Marye Gruffith spoke of all the clergy in general, terming them devils and black dogs, words, as Maurice Robbins rightly says, worthy of severe punishment, if they be duly proved, assures Maurice Robbins that he will further her punishment rather than speak for her. Wishes Maurice Robbins to know that William Maurice is not one to bolster any bad words or actions but will do his best to punish them and to seek redress if he finds fault in Maurice Robbins when the bishop, who, he is sure, will see any disorders redressed, comes. Clenennau letters and papers 344. vtls005594264 ISYSARCHB54	File - [Sir] William Maurice, Clennennau, to his cousin Mr Hughes 'the connsler' at his chamber in Gray's Inn, 1617, June 9. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Thanks the recipient for taking pains for William Maurice's business in the Star Chamber and putting in a demur[rer] to the bill of Owen Ellis against William Maurice and thirty others in the Star Chamber, seventeen of them a jury and the others witnesses for the King touching his inheritance upon a Commission of Survey, as appears by the Answer of Demur[rer]s which was referred to the King's sergeant, who should have best course to consider the King's title, and to countenance all that truly endeavour therein. For if juries and witnesses [that] upon their oaths and evidence set down the King's right shall therefore be called to the Star Chamber without good cause, it will procure unwillingness and unreadiness for any to appear to do the King's service. Marvels at Sergeant Finch's report that this new trouble should arise, firstly for William Maurice to make a better answer, for he had hoped the recipient had answered all points reasonably, being no great matter and fit for the Star Chamber, but especially for the jury and witnesses for the King, the cause being already in the Exchequer Chamber to be tried there. As for the rest of the matters against William Maurice in the bill, touching incontinence in his younger years, a matter already pardoned and fit for ecclesiastical censure otherwise, and touching mises and other defects falsely supposed against William Maurice as one of the deputy lieutenants of his county, fitting for the Lord Lieutenant to examine rather than the Star Chamber, and such other trifling matters in the bill, William Maurice was ready (but upon the recipient's opinion upon his demurrer, that all should be dismissed) to answer. So he now only desires a dedimus potestatem to make his answer at home, being a man employed in the King's service of musters appointed at this time, and also of 80 years of age and unable to travel, especially since the process is served only seven days before the day of appearance. For the rest, [desires] upon so short a warning, to have such a Commission as the other five defendants had, the proceedings wherein appear by the Commissioner's Certificate which William Maurice hopes will declare the manner of his proceedings, that after he [?the Commissioner] had examined them upon a number of articles, he left the Commission with the Commissioners' clerk to be engrossed and went on his way. Also hopes the recipient will talk with Sergeant Finch of how he reported the cause and the matter referred to him. Commits all to the recipient's care and consideration and the rest to the report of William Maurice's cousin Mr Evance, William Maurice's solicitor. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 344. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 345. vtls005594265 ISYSARCHB54	File - Humffrey Jones, Cravelien, to Sir William Maurice, kt, Clennennau, 1617, June 13. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The poor bearer, Humffrey Jones's man and William Maurice's late servant, an agent, with others of William Maurice's servants by William Maurice's appointment and directions, in keeping possession of and chasing off cattle from the lands in variance between William Maurice and his neighbour Robert ap John ap Humfrey, was made the principal plaintiff to bring an information in his name at the Council of the Marches for some supposed misdemeanour committed by Robert ap John ap Humfrey and his people. All the differences were afterwards mediated by Lord Eure, the late Lord President, and upon the non-prosecution of the information the poor fellow was fined some five marks or thereabouts, which still comes in charge against him to the sheriff. If he is taken thereupon, all his means will not discharge it. Therefore craves William Maurice's favour on the bearer's behalf, that William Maurice, now having other occasion to go to the Council, will take some course for the discharge thereof, since he became subject thereto by William Maurice's means and occasion. William Maurice will therein

Postscript: Mr Rowland White of Beaumaris has some timber bestowed upon him in Merionethshire by diverse of his friends, which is lying ready sawed and squared. He desires the help of his worthy friends in these parts and their tenants to have them carried to the waterside to be loaded. Among the rest, has special directions to solicit William Maurice as Rowland White's friend, for William Maurice's furtherance therein. Parson Rowlands of Harlech and one Anthony David Lloyd will say where the timber is, if William Maurice will leave directions with his tenants to help the carriage upon notice being given to them. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 345. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 346. vtls005594266 ISYSARCHB54	File - Gruffyth Jones, Ludlow, to Sir William Maurice, kt, Clenennau, 1617, July 12. Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: The court, upon motion that Mr Owen Elis was in London and would return this way, ordered that no proceedings should pass in the matters between him and William Maurice until his return, he to join in answer with his wife, whose answer to both William Maurice's bills was returned separately. Mr Owen Elis came to Ludlow on 5 July, and joining in answer with his wife by order of the court, caused a motion to be made for dismissing his wife, upon the information for the words, which was defended by Mr Attorney. The court referred the matter to the report of Sir Henry Townshend, kt, who has not yet reported thereon. Upon his report the court is to take such order as seems fit. Mr Owen Elis 'scanneth' William Maurice's oath for the possession and intends to have an alteration of the order for William Maurice's possession, but Gruffyth Jones thinks he will not prevail in his purpose. Sends enclosed a copy of the order taken between John Evans and William Maurice. Mr Jones and Mr Waties say they can give William Maurice no further directions than are in the order for commencing William Maurice's action at law and they refer William Maurice to the advice of his counsel at the commencement, whether to take an action of trespass or 'eieccone firme'. But Mr Jones is of the opinion that an action of 'eieccone firme' will lie upon William Maurice's lease, for by order of the court they are ordered to confess the entry and ejectment and to rely on the titles. Can return only to Conwy, where he will bring all William Maurice's other copies. Let William Maurice make haste there at the beginning of the Sessions, to set the matter forward without delay. Is a little troubled for his neighbour Gruffith ap John ap Robert who executed a commission for Mr John Lloyd at Bala, for there is an information preferred against Gruffyth Jones in that behalf, which he hopes to answer well enough. Has no strange news to tell. Postscript: To-day, about ten o'clock, after Gruffyth Jones wrote the above, the matter for the words was reported by Sir Henry Townshend to be very idle and frivolous, and not fit for the court to hold plea thereof. The court therefore dismissed the defendant without costs. Mr Littleton vouched many precedents, but they would not do, for both the Justice and Sir Henry Townshend were of the opinion that for words of defamation there was remedy to be had at the ecclesiastical laws, and for slanderous words the common law provided damages. They therefore thought good not to hold plea thereof any further but to dismiss the case. The reason, as Gruffyth Jones believes and is given to understand by such of the Justice's men as love William Maurice why Mr Justice was so partial to Mr Owen Ellis, was that the latter procured letters from great noblemen to most of the Council on his behalf, not only for the matter of words but also for the matter of title. Mr Justice privately told Mr Owen Ellis that the Council would write letters to Sir Francis Eure touching the matter of the title, and would refer it to him to make an end if he can; if not, the Council promised him a favourable hearing. Will work what means he can to know the effects of those letters if he may. Mr Owen Ellis is gallant in apparel and very stout, for he will not touch his cap to Gruffyth Jones though Gruffyth Jones salutes him with all humility, but Gruffyth Jones will demand of him noble costs for the matter dismissed before he goes away if conveniently he can, namely the costs ordered for the last delay when his wife had commission to answer at home. Nodyn Note [generalNote]:

Since William Maurice's departure, diverse motions have been made on both sides in William Maurice's causes, but hopes that the goodness of William Maurice's causes and the due care had by those put in trust to effect William Maurice's affairs have been such that William Maurice's causes have been so managed that upon reading the copies of the orders which Mr John Powell, William Maurice's careful attorney sent him, William Maurice will call to memory what John Lloyd said in William Maurice's chamber when he took his leave, which he hopes he has in all respects performed as far as in him lay. The substance of the orders is that William Maurice's possession shall continue, although no express words to that end are mentioned in the order in respect that it is not needed in respect of William Maurice's former possession until the matter is tried in the Exchequer and the misdemeanours are tried next Trinity Term in the Arches after the causes for the title are heard and censured in the Exchequer, the mean profit to be paid by William Maurice since he was last in possession until the matter is heard at the Exchequer, if the trial falls against William Maurice, which John Lloyd hopes will never happen. If John Lloyd has not been mindful of William Maurice and his causes to his utmost, he is to blame, but refers his censure herein to William Maurice's discretion, and prays that he may be able to perform any service which is pleasant and acceptable to William Maurice. 'Paucapienti'. Has done his best according to his duty, and will continue to do so for William Maurice or any of his while he lives. Prays God to defend William Maurice and his from the wicked wiles of his adversaries and to continue His gracious love and favour to William Maurice, continuing also William Maurice's health, welfare and prosperity. Commendations to Mr Thomas Pughe and all William Maurice's followers and servants. Postscript: Sir Henry Townshend commends himself to William Maurice. Mr Thomas Pughe's friend's ? Clenennau letters and papers 348. vtls005594268 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council (named), Whitehall, to [William Compton], Lord Compton,	1618, April 25. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Though the equipping and training of the forces of the Welsh counties has of late years drawn many directions from them, the Council still holds it expedient, both for the continuance of those bands which are complete in numbers and equipment and for supplying defects which upon view of the certificates appear to be more than they expected after so many frequent addresses, to call on William Compton for an effectual and speedy supply thereof, as conduces in consequence of state to the King's service and the defence and safety of the realm. Therefore, by the King's special command signified to the Council, they require William Compton according to his authority in the Welsh counties under his lieutenancy at some convenient time this summer to cause a general view to be taken of all the forces in those counties, both foot and horse, and an enrolment to be made of all the numbers, trained and untrained, and especially that the trained bands be made complete by supplying the places of such officers and others as are dead, insufficient or otherwise wanting with those of better quality and such other freeholders, farmers,

	owners of land or householders as are fit therefor. Let William Compton also see that the forces' arms are good and serviceable, namely, for the foot, muskets and pikes, for though many callivers are in various counties enrolled amongst the shot, William Compton knows that modern use excludes the calliver as unserviceable and not to be allowed upon any musters of arms; require him therefore to change such callivers as are amongst the county bands into muskets with as much convenience as he may for the advantage of the King's service. Whereas the numbers of horse have been so long neglected that they are for the most part defective in arms and serviceable horses, it is high time after so many admonitions that the troops of horse be filled and made complete with all necessary provisions and equipment, excepting only coats for foot and horse and conduct money, which may be spared until further order is given. Let William Compton also cause all the trained bands to be trained, exercised and displayed at such fit and convenient times and places as WC in his discretion finds expedient for the ease of the county and the better instructing of those forces in the use and practise of their armour, wherein it is especially required that all collecting captains, lieutenants and under-officers perform their duty according to the charges committed to them. No person is to excuse himself from this duty and service, except those known to be the King's servants at court. Such of the clergy as are appointed to find armour, let William Compton [according] to the list he received from the bishop likewise cause to be showed and trained as aforesaid. Lastly let such provisions be made of powder, match, bullets and carriages as has been thought expedient by former directions for the use of these counties, which are meet to be contained, observed and executed. Let William Compton have a special care for these things as a matter of special consequence and return a certificate thereof before the last day of Oct. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 348. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Mr Samuell Parker, a man of Ludlow worth £20,000 at his death, died last week, having only one daughter. John Lloyd is at this time troubled with an ague. This term is reasonable, but John Lloyd has known many better. For his part, has for five weeks been troubled with an ague which still hangs upon him and vexes him this term. Sir Walter Rawleighe's voyage is quite overthrown to the great hindrance of many. It is credibly reported that Sir Thomas Bromley, a knight born in Shropshire, son and heir of Sir Henry Bromley, kt, dec., who was licensed by the King to travel, has robbed the King of Spain's treasure house and taken millions of unknown riches and treasures from there. Now he lies upon the narrow seas, awaiting the King's pardon. Clenennau letters and papers 354. vtls005594274 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Lloyd, Ludlow, to his friend Sir William Maurice, kt, 1618, June 16. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Received William Maurice's letter and the token. Has informed Sir Thomas Chamberleyn and the rest of the Council of William Maurice's commendations; they return the same. As for William Maurice's matter mentioned in the letter, has required the bill of Mr Harry Pryce, the counsellor, to whom it was entered from the office to peruse, and perceives that the matter is so bad that they have much ado to make a good bill. Therefore, according to the order and rule of the court, they must have time to peruse it and make it as perfect as they can. William Maurice's request for a dedimus potestatem shall be fulfilled; told the Council in the garden on Monday evening that the plaintiff's counsel kept William Maurice's bill to peruse and that John Lloyd could not have it until they had done so, and that William Maurice is employed on the King's affairs and that his being at home was uncertain in respect of his occasions. Therefore requested that William Maurice might have a commission for him and his servants to take their answers at home, retrievable on 29 Aug., the first day of the next appearance. When John Lloyd has the bill, this shall be moved and on John Lloyd's credit assuredly granted, without paying a penny costs if possible. Told Sir Francis Eure that the sheriff of Merionethshire was sick and in great extremity, and that if he thought good, William Maurice thought best to begin the sessions in Anglesey. He answered that he had two days before sent directions that he would begin in Merionethshire and must therefore do so. The President will be at Ludlow tonight or tomorrow; diverse of his people came tonight. Is credibly informed that he will not come to Anglesey, Caernarfonshire or Merionethshire at this time, but will go only to Montgomeryshire with the judges, who begin their circuits on 6 July. The bearer has left with John Lloyd 10s. in silver besides the token in the letter, to be disbursed for William Maurice as required. What remains undisbursed, if any, which John Lloyd does not know until he sees the bill, shall be ready to be defrayed by John Lloyd at the next appearance. Since William Maurice had named no commissioners to take his answer and to swear him, John Lloyd has taken the names of Owen Thomas Owen and Mores ap John ap Mores, gent's, to do so. In making the certificate, let the commissioners be careful that they mention that they have taken of William Maurice and the rest of the defendants perfect and direct answer in writing upon their corporal oaths, for John Lloyd has [had] great hindrance and inconvenience [has] fallen to many when commissioners in like matters have forgotten to mention in their certificate that they had taken the defendants' answers upon their corporal oaths, which is the only point to be certified. Knows the gentlemen aforementioned will perform the same and can rather give John Lloyd directions, but must remember William Maurice. Postscript: William Maurice may get any counsellor he prefers to draw his answer and the rest, and after drawing it up, may let one or both swear him and the others upon the answers and certify. Afterwards the commission must be delivered by the commissioners or one of them to a messenger who will bring it to Ludlow that day or the next, for he must be sworn that he received it from one or both of the commissioners. William Maurice will receive the commission, if not before, at the sessions for Caernarfonshire, from one Mr Thomas Jones, one of the clerks of the court and servant in livery to Sir Francis Eure, chief justice of the assizes.

Clenennau letters and papers 356. vtls005594276 ISYSARCHB54	File - Richard Evans, London, to his uncle Sir William Maurice, 1618, June 27. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has received William Maurice's letter and £10 which have been delivered to Mr Oliver Morris with the subpoenas. He told the writer flatly that he would not meddle in the matter nor lay out any more money for William Maurice or Lady Eure. When the writer saw him casting away the writs, he took them up and brought them away with him. He then caused a motion to be made for a dedimus potestatem. But the defendants be so many that he cannot, his money being so scant, bring a dedimus for them all. But if he can get money he will do so. Refers to a suit between Sir Harry Johnes, his tenants, and William Maurice. The money to be paid into court there to remain until the hearing. Sir Harry follows it hard 'but for all that hee is verie willinge to make an agreement as the berrer cane tell you'. Commissioners' names have been agreed upon with much ado ... and in the suit with Owen Ellis. References to other suits pending at the Shropshire Sessions. Postscript: Sir Harry Johnes moved the court twice to have the commission executed at Llanbadarn and the writer would have it at Harlech, and so at the end Baron Bromley appointed it to be executed at 'Gwregsam'. Sir Harry is not well pleased with that nor the writer either. He knows not where it is to be, in any case he means it shall not be at 'Gwregsam'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 356. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Desires William Owen's favour to write to Hugh Owen, Gwynnynog, to ask him to come to William Maurice by that time since he has skill in surveying land. The principal thing that William Maurice would learn is the quantity of the bovat and how many acres the same contains. Will consider William Owen's charges and gains therein. Subscribed: William Owen's reply. Begs William Maurice to accept reply by word of mouth with his man, as William Owen has no time to express his mind at length in writing. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 358. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

His name is Rees the son of David ap Robert alias David Joyner. He claims inheritance after his father and elder brother. Since he was keeping schools in other countries, he had no notice that the land belonged to him until of late. Clenennau letters and papers 360. vtls005594280 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Lloyd, Ludlow, to Sir William Maurice, 1618, Sept. 8. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Lengthy account of legal business. Issues not clearly indicated. John Lloyd gave 2s. fee to Mr John Powel and spared further charges at this time, for if he had given more it would have been needless and therefore better spared 'for when you are present in person you may do as you please'. In William Maurice's absence the John Lloyd will disburse bare, ordinary and necessary fees and no more. Means to be in London on the 26th Oct., where he hopes to see his Worship, for he has special occasion to travel hither. But he will confer at large with Mr John Powel before going and will leave him his fees and all other fees whatsoever to be disbursed in William Maurice's causes. Therefore William Maurice need only send his letter to Mr Powel. There are not any of the Council resident here at this time. Sir Harry Townshend went to Shrewsbury with my Lord President. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Clenennau letters and papers 365. vtls005594286 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Privy Council, Whitehall, to the Lord President, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Reference to military preparations throughout Christendom. The King has therefore to keep a vigilant eye on the safety of his own dominions by requiring a more speedy supply of all defects in the armed forces of the realm than has yet been performed in time of peace. General view and muster ordered by His Majesty's special command, and order to repair all defects in numbers and arms. It is high time at length after so many admonitions that the troops of horse be filled up and made complete. Arms provided by the clergy to be disposed amongst the trained bands and the troops of horse. Trained bands to be ready at ten days' warning. Powder and match to be provided in such proportions as in the time of the late Queen, and in such quantity as is expressed in the foot of the letter, to be laid up and kept in the places there	1618/19, Feb. 11.

	mentioned. Order for the repair of the beacons which are altogether neglected and decayed. Certificate required between now and the 11th April next. He is glad of William Maurice's safe return from London. He expected him in Caernarvon to go to Conwy Assizes on Sunday and Monday last. Since William Maurice did not come, William Thomas is sending him a copy of the Privy Council letter (No. 365). The original is with Sir John Wynn in Conwy. The foot of the letter is very imperfect, for Caernarvon is joined with Haverford West [Hereford West in document] as supposed to be in Pembrokeshire. Imagines they meant the town of Carmarthen which notwithstanding is the chief town of Carmarthenshire which is always omitted, and so are Flintshire, Radnorshire, Breconshire and Montgomeryshire. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 367. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 369. vtls005594290 ISYSARCHB54	File - William [Compton], Earl of Northampton, Lord President, Ludlow Castle, to the late deputy-lieutenants of Caernarfonshire, Sir John Wynn, Sir William ...,	1618/19, March 20.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: William [Compton], Earl of Northampton, Lord President, Ludlow Castle, to the late deputy-lieutenants of Caernarfonshire, Sir John Wynn, Sir William Maurice, Sir William Thomas and John Gruffydd of Llyn. Whereas there was a mise of £400 of late years taxed and levied in Caernarfonshire, intended for some service in Ireland, which money it is alleged remains in the hands of the deputy-lieutenants or some of them, and not any as yet employed, and whereas it is the President's desire to give the country all the ease he can in their mises and taxes, and not to suffer them to be pressed and charged with any more than mere necessity shall require, he has thought good to write to them in that behalf, as hereafter he intends to signify unto all other counties within his lieutenancy. Requires them to be careful and heedful that no other mise be imposed or levied for any service until the said £400 be disbursed. He means that whensoever the country shall be charged to make provision for arms and furniture, that the said £400, or so much thereof as shall be needful, shall be employed and disbursed without any new imposition upon the country. Further requires that if any part of the said mise be unpaid unto any of them within their several limits, either by the parties assessed or by the collectors, then 'you the then deputy lieutenants take order, every man within his limit, that the same be presently paid'. Postscript: If there be not present order taken for the disposing of this money to the country's good it will be begged of the King as in other countries it has been. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 369.

Clenennau letters and papers 370. vtls005594291 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Lloyd, Ludlow, to Sir William Maurice,	1618/19, March 23.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Because of William Maurice's absence, the writer and his attorney, Mr John Powel, have delayed execution of the commission in issue between him and Mr Edward Price. Legal details of this business. Has suggested that the commission be executed at a house in Penmorva according to directions sent by William Maurice's sister, Mrs Anne Wynn Brynkir. If the court directs otherwise they will have to yield. The Lord President is now at Bewdley and returns before Easter to Ludlow, and is resolved to stay in Ludlow all the summer. Mr Justice and Sir Henry Townshend have gone home. They begin their circuit at Chester upon Easter Monday next. There is news that the Spanish fleet is dispersed and had no intent towards England, but is bound for the Turk's country. But for all this 'flying' news, it is good in the writer's opinion to be always ready to answer the enemy ... God make us strong and ready in true faith and otherwise with good conscience in all respects to perform the same to the glory of God. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 370.

Clenennau letters and papers 371. vtls005594292 ISYSARCHB54	File - Harry Johnes to Sir William Maurice,	1618/19, March.

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Hopes his mother never had nor shall have cause to think the writer unnatural, nor William Maurice just cause to task him of unkindness. If the Harry Johnes's good conscience has given William Maurice way so long to play upon the advantage of time, without respect unto his act and deed, he has little cause to complain. Money charges in order to protect himself from imminent wrongs, the writer holds goods well spent. With regard to the titles that his father-in-law, in his mother's right, might pretend any interest to, the sufficiency of those that dealt with Harry Johnes might give William Maurice assurance that they would not deal upon uncertainties. His filial respect for his mother is such that he wishes she would no more grieve William Maurice, for she is not so well as then she was. Thanks William Maurice for his kind dealing in appointing so 'indifferent' a place for the execution of the commission, which he will requite with the like courtesy. But is uncertain whether he can come to Llanbadarn. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 371. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 372. vtls005594293 ISYSARCHB54	File - Anne Wen Brynkir to her brother, Sir William Maurice, at Mrs Myllington's house in Paul's Chaine, 1618/19, Jan. [15-31]. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The bearer Richard Anwell, Anne Wen Brynkir's son-in-law, sent to her to know if she had anything to send to London, and lest he should think her angry with him for his marriage, she has thought good to write by him some part of her brother's business. She knows William Maurice's need of money is great. Owen Ellis provides what he can both in money and letters, especially to William Maurice's worthy friend Sir Francis Dasey, from Sir John Wine. There has been a family conference about the jury, at which her son, Ellis Brynkir, her cousin Morice Johns, her daughter Margaret, her nephew Roland Griffiths, and herself were present. Four of the jury are prepared to come to London either Saturday or Monday next. The fifth may not come because he is their friend. His name is Robert ap William Pricharde. Morice Johns thinks that Ellis Brynkir should let his wife go to her sister, Lady Eure, for advice about the jury. She will, God willing, go forth on Friday next as hard as the weather is; and on Saturday Morice Johns goes after her to Porkinton, and hence on Monday to London. A letter from William Maurice's attorney, Mr Johns, has arrived, inquiring about the commission in the matter between him and wife of John ap Richard ap Eleesa. She sent the latter to Morice Johns who has appointed a place and commissioners, and sent a note by Mr John Thomas, Coytreffe, to the Council. News about the execution of another commission at Dolbenmaen. Her cousin, Robert Griffith Lloyd, is dead, and was buried on New Year's Day. Her niece, Anne Thomas Owen, was angry because they did not go to the burial, but the weather was so extreme. Has not heard anything of the 'mile stones' from Frulude [Ffriddlwyd] yet, which is a great hindrance. Urges William Maurice to take no care for any other matters here at home, for, God willing, the writer will do what she is able till death. Sends commendations from Lady William Maurice, her cousin Jane Griffith, her daughter Margaret, her niece Jane Awbrey, and her niece Margaret Morice, with the rest of her brother's well-willing friends. Her son, Ellis Brynkir, also prays for him and would have a letter. His grandchild, Margaret Evans, humbly thanks him for her token and 'we' for our gloves. Postscript: Begs her brother not to set the tenement of Garreg Velen until she sees him. 'Take no notice that Richard Anwill is married'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 372. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	fishing he will move Sir Thomas Trevor and Sir John Walter herein with a letter under his master's hand. As for the quarries, William Maurice shall have his patent next term ... it will cost £8 as the secretary told the writer. As for the cloaks he was fain to go to his master's old friends, Mr Prat, and there took up eight liveries and a cloak for the footman. The cloak, though somewhat coarse, is the best he has. The writer has put his hand to the bill conditionally, so that his Worship may agree when he comes up to London himself. As for the spices and sugar loaf, he has no money to pay for them but will do what he can therein. He and Rowland Gruffydd entered into bond with one Mr James Medlecot, merchant tailor, for £40. Morris Jones received £20 and her Ladyship the other £20, so that the writer received not a penny. Sends two new books by the bearer. Has also sent two quarts or more of 'sallet oel' by the Oswestry carrier, Robert Floyd. His master should cause someone to inquire for the same at Mr Blodwell's shop. He cannot say when he will be home because her Ladyship is to go to Northamptonshire for two or three days and then she will come home. She has done her best endeavour in William Maurice's causes 'soe did wee all: ut apparet'. Has spoken with Morris Jones for money to buy Mrs Anne a hat but he complains that he wants money himself. The writer is not acquainted with any hat-seller and therefore wonders whether he can be trusted. Paper and both kinds of wax will be sent with the cloak. Morris Jones and Humffrey Jones are cold friends, but the writer could not tell Morris Jones that William Maurice means to have a lease of Aberglaslyn 'for they be both fiends and foes for anythinge I know'. Owen Ellis cannot abide honest Rowland Gruffydd and the writer. Rowland was very rude with Sir Henry Johnes about William Maurice's money, and so likewise was Morris Jones. But Mr Price, Sir William Thomas's son-in-law, railed against Rowland Gruffydd, Morris Jones, and the writer. He is against William Maurice tooth and nail and is very 'yelle' both in his discourse and carriage teste Henrico Bodvell armig. Sir Ffoulk Grevell's letter to Sir John Walter (delivered by the writer) did much good in their cause against Owen Ellis. 	Understands that William Maurice has lately been drawn to agree with his arch-adversary, Owen Ellis, on all suits between them. Though this is likely to but nine days' wonder in the country 'yet doth it give us good cause of wonder indeed that are so deeply engaged to maintain suit with him, first begun by yourself, and are now plainly by you forsaken and left out of the treaty'. Protests that this is not the right course, even with strangers, much less with persons so near in blood. William Maurice, indeed, has taken the thorn out of his own foot to put in 'ours'. Francis Eure loves peace though he be no partaker of it himself, and therefore he is glad that William Maurice is at peace. But he must not blame the others if upon his example they show themselves hereafter as reserved as he has been. They will not shrink from the burden of defending themselves, though they neither have confidence in him, nor will they now be able to 'lean to any wall or back beyond Trayth Mawre and Trayth Bychan'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 388. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The collector took infinite pains in the business so that it held him day and night without respite or rest for he was fain to write three long estreats on parchment ... the collector's bond and the certificate letters to all the commissioners, ten warrants to summon the meeting, ten more warrants to have the subsidy rated and ten schedules thereunto annexed, so that 'there is upon you five shillings to my cousin, Griffith Jones, as the rest of the commissioners have paid or are to pay'. Since then news has come to Ludlow by packet that Mr Attorney is to receive his answer in the Star Chamber this day. Likewise news came there by packet signifying that a parliament begins the sixteenth of Jan. and that the Lord Chief Justice shall be Lord Treasurer. Attached: 1620, Oct. 30. News of the Attorney General as above. News lately from Bohemia that the King is very strong and well provided and that the Marquis Dampier, General to the Emperor, was lately taken in battle by the King of Bohemia's army and was beheaded and his head set up in Prague. Some three thousand of his men were slain and some chief men taken prisoners. There is speech of a new contribution for the maintenance of the Palatine's own country for Marquis Spindalo has taken some cities there and now aid is to be sent thither. Mr Gruffydd of Llyn carried the victor[y] here and not only sent the sheriff's commission and writ home but 'made means to make sheriff', for Sir John Bodvel did all he could to be sheriff and missed. Mr John Gruffydd got letters from the Privy Council in managing his business. There is great means made to Lord Eures for Mr Gruffydd. The writer urges his Worship to see that 'all your frends may geive theire election with him, which will be excusable in you for you have passed your voice with Sir Richard. He desires you to write unto Sir John that though you gave your voyce with him [to] his sonne that your frends may be with Mr Gruffydd. A letter to this effect he desireth you to write'. William Maurice Jones desires his favour and that his worship's friends may be with Mr Gruffydd. Has delivered his Worship's letter to William Maurice Jones and the writer is to have an answer by the time he comes home. George Williams entreats his master that his friends and well-willers may be with Mr Gruffydd who is a fine gentleman and well beloved here. Legal business. George Williams is afraid that Mr Lakon played the knave by not delivering the attachment to the Sheriff. George Williams has delivered the £100 and £22 more to be carried here by the carrier, which will be here Tuesday next. Mr James Price is here made distracted, toxicated and staggered for his man went away from him and stole £40 in gold and silver and took both horse and all. He came to inquire where his man bought fine clothes and there he railed upon the man and the woman and called them 'whores'. All the women in the street hard by Holborn Conduit [Connditte] did beat him very sore and abuse him vilely; they called him 'the foolish Welsh justice'. Moreover he fell out with Mr Oliver Morris and railed upon him and Mr Oliver Morris threw his books and papers and bade him go hang himself. He is penniless and will be glad to receive his money. Mr Lane the saddler is not yet come home and George Williams cannot tell what his answer will be about Mrs Awbrey's saddle. Has written to Mr Owen Arthyr. He told the writer that a hundred of English hops will cost £6 George Williams 'but you are to have but half a hundred'. Sir Henry Yelverton, the King's Attorney General is censured and is fined for four thousand pounds and is imprisoned in the Tower during His Majesty's pleasure. Encloses a copy of all news 'in print' and the proclamation. More legal business in action of Sir Richard Bulkeley and others. Your servant most obedient to command. Postscript: Lady Jones is as sick as she was before. George Williams was there and told her waiting maid that William Maurice and Lady Maurice had sent him to see how she did. He has been so welcomed there that he does not intend to go thither any more 'let her live or die'. Now understands that he was too slow in his request and that William Maurice's voice had been assured to another before he heard from the writer. He does not therefore undervalue William Maurice's love for him but is sorry for his own ill hap in not being sooner with this request. He will not press what may not become William Maurice to grant nor the writer to desire. 'Your promise is to great a tie of you, I acknowledge, to be recaled, but my resolucion beinge to stand out in election ... my desire is to you that you will please as far as yt may be without prediudice of your worde to graunte mee your favoure in leavunge youre frendes to theire libertie and that I may be strengthened by them if without injurie to yourselfe it may be soe'. John Gruffydd weighs other men's credits in the same balance as his own so that he would not request at William Maurice's hands what he himself would be unwilling to do in like case; he honours and respects

Clenennau letters and papers 401. vtls005594322 ISYSARCHB54	File - Thomas Glynne to Sir William Maurice, 1620, Nov. 21. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Thomas Glynne has hitherto sought the place of deputy lieutenant in hope of the continuance of William Maurice's amity towards him 'as formerly betweene yourselfe and my father ... by which how muche good the countrey found I leave to be aenounced by you livinge and his prayse in the grave'. Now understands that William Maurice is drawn by those who neither love his credit nor their country's quiet to observe his own glory and that only for the private ends of those who make show of fidelity. It was always William Maurice's plausible custom to muster Evionydd and Uwchgwyrfai as his own limits, and the writer doubted not that William Maurice's care had still continued that they might have reserved that limit to themselves. 'Alas is it not a shame in suche an unseasonable time to trouble the whole limit to goe to Caernarvon. I assure myselfe it proceeds not from you but from the instigation of those whome I formerly mentioned. Certainly the election of Knight of the Shire should proceede from the free will of the freeholders accordinge to the statute and by His Majesty's proclamation ... and not from the threatts of these musters, the ende whereof will not prove auspicious unto them'. Asks for his request to be granted ... which proceeds from no other respect but care of William Maurice's reputation and Thomas Glynne's love of his neighbours whom he must defend against the malice of those who seek their trouble. Let it please William Maurice therefore to write by the bearer to the constables to recall the warrant for mustering Uwchgwyrfai and Evionydd until the writer's commission to come home which is under seal. At which time he will by William Maurice's directions perfect whatsoever may be thought amiss. This being granted he will ever honour him as a worthy uncle and best friend. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 401. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Wishes to be remembered to his kind aunt, Mrs Brynkir, to the young gentlewoman, Mrs Awbrey, and especially to his dearest cousin and niece [using the terms of kindred], to Mr Brynkir, etc. Notwithstanding his delayed durance, he rests very glad to hear of the tidings of William Maurice's health (which God of his infinite goodness continue as long as the vigour of nature permits). 'Sir, you cannot greatly blame me to think it long to harken for the safe returne of your man and my good friend George ... in hopefull expectation of better news unto me for my enlargement than proceeded out of either Morrice Jones his mouth or my cousin John Wyne ... namely that the fellow my persecutor was gon to France and that the money would not be accepted'. Clenennau letters and papers 408. vtls005594330 ISYSARCHB54	File - Robert Sonlley, Moxton, to his uncle, Sir William Maurice,	1620/21, March 12.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Was bold to write on behalf of his uncle, John Sonlley, whom it has pleased God to call for out of this transitory life since the time William Maurice wrote to him for answer in this matter. The reply imported that money is scant this year and advised forbearance for a time. Robert Sonlley's aunt, John Sonlley's wife, is destitute, having charge of children, and is in debt, finding the benevolence of men in churches to be of small purpose. She was advised to make means unto friends to speak to their tenants to bestow their devotions in lambs and kids. And because William Maurice's country is well furnished with cattle and such like, and the price of them so low this year, and money so scant, Robert Sonlley's aunt entreats William Maurice's expected and respected favour among his tenants. In so doing he will do a charitable deed in taking compassion on the fatherless children and widow. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Although she has never deserved any good from her father, begs him to afford her relief and that speedily. Has neither food nor clothes nor ability to pay for house room. Sends also a proclamation of rebellion addressed to the sheriff and an order for an injunction staying the carrying away of mill stones from the quarries until the cause be decreed in the Exchequer Chamber ... Trial against Sir Henry Jones could not proceed before the first sitting of the Lord Chief Baron at Guild Hall the next term because the actions are laid in London. Sends answers of John Griffith and Rowland ap William, also a copy of the depositions of the last commission between William Maurice and Sir Richard Bulkeley and John Meredith. He has no news except that the Dean of Westminster is made Bishop of Lincoln and Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England. He took his oath on Wednesday last, and the Bishop of Bangor is committed to the Fleet for some presumptuous 'tenents before the King at Greenwich on Sunday last was fortnight'. His Majesty before his going on progress reconciled with William Maurice's old friend Sir Edward Cooke and his lady and caused them to lie together that night as it was reported. Postscript: Let not George fail to come by Richard Anwyl to take directions if he be sent to Bridgnorth, and that speedily.

'But I most not be oblivious lest I should be taxed with obtusnes but most needs be mindful of spllendidious and resplendent Countesse Nancie, and to remember likewise my commendations to Mr Ievan Owen, also Countesse Nancie's gentleman'. George Williams's horse miscarried at Birmingham because he was very filthily pricked at home and not well shod. Was compelled to hire a horse from Birmingham to go to London and to leave his own horse there very lame. The matter concerning quarries is to be tried on Monday next. Other legal business. Of current news, Sir James Price of Ynysynmangwun's [Ynysymaengwyn] Lady died on July 1st, 1622. Sir James prepares for her funeral. Lord Cook in the Court of Wards is quitted for fifty thousand pounds arrears ... of Hutton's lands due to the King. The report is that the great match goes forward. The King was last week at Cottam to see the navy. The great Turk, as the current goes at the exchange, and all his evil issue are murdered by a great Bastam. John Pugh has gone beyond the seas and as the report is here he was discharged from his troubles: two others of his name, the one at Gravesend and the other at Dover, were taken in his stead ... but Thomas Ellis will pay them

	sound charges for their trouble. John Pugh might have good charges if he had been advised, for Thomas Ellis could not bring witnesses to prove that he hurt Robert ap Humphrey. The business between the gentlemen of Caernarfonshire in the Star Chamber is hotly pursued on both sides, and it is reported that some of the Griffin's side used some indecent speeches about the Lord Keeper, which provoked him to more anger than he himself was inclined. There are some twelve to be created in nobility: Crandfield, Lord Treasurer, to be Earl of Coventry; Mandevill, late Lord Treasurer and now Lord President, to be Earl of Carlisle; Lord Digby, though he be from home, to be Earl of Bristol, and Lord Doncaster to be Earl of some other place. John Horton is dead ... 'take upon you nothing that John Horton is dead but to Rowland Gruffydd and Mrs Anne; advise them not to tell it in the house for some busiebody will tell Marie Horton. Doe not leave this letter in your chamber upon the table. I have a reason to saye so'. There is a shrewd petition against Sir Henry Jones delivered to the Lord Keeper ... knows not exactly what it is ... unless he or somebody else for him will prevent inconvenience he shall be out of the commission of the peace being custos rotulorum. Mr Brynkir is well ... William Maurice's token has been delivered to him. Many are asking for William Maurice. More legal business. Lady Bulkeley's solicitor came to the writer to entreat peace 'and I answered him of the abuse that Mr Humffrey Jones and Boulton did in procuring me to speak unto you for agreement'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 414. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

It is not the best way to come in the night unless there be assurance of some of the company in the town, for in the night time none of the company can be placed aboard. Mark this course. In the day time the manner is that many do make merry and drink. 'If you stay till Tuesday somewhat late, our company being aboard, then we both with other gentlemen will repayre near the shippe and the captayne with the master will come forth to the shore to make merrye as he hath donne with Hughe Gwyn either day. Then so many as will be in the shippe of oure men may contende with them till that we from the shore may them helpe'. If the writer's cousin, Mr Robert Vychan, may have a score of these men to make merry in the town on Candlemas night, then it would be best that night to apprehend 'those' and to deal with the rest as they may. They cannot do so but that they will disgrace Henry Rowlands and themselves greatly. Has his warrant for anything he did. Indeed he must tell William Maurice that he was fain to be very earnest with Mr Jones. Mr Gwynn has since been there. Henry Rowlands told him of the muttering but found no averseness in him. 'When Mr Jones cometh home I doe of my love wishe you to take all kindly as I well knowe that you are full of humanitye that I need not so advise you. And for his frends yt is no wisdom to carie any hand over them'. Has received William Maurice's loving and comfortable letter. Mr Owen, the writer's tutor, received 40s. Concerning other charges William Maurice shall know about them from the tutor and from Brynkir. Has but one pair of sheets. Cannot be without two pair. Nothing else is wanting 'for which I do hope and assure myself the Lord of Heaven will recompense you whom I do daily desire most humbly so to do'. Has written to John Williams to London about some books, and hopes they will be provided soon for indeed they be very needful. Mr Owen has brought him two or three, and the writer has bought some in the second hand. Would not take three times as much as he paid for them. Besides he has bought other necessary things which he will subscribe with the 10s. John left for him. If he can spy any booke which he thinks would delight William Maurice, either for matter or method, about 'astronomie' or anything else, he will by God his grace send it to him. Feels he need not be very tedious to his uncle since William Maurice shall understand his tutor's mind about everything. But he would desire his dear uncle to do after the tutor's letter as near as he possibly can for in truth he is a very kind man. Wishes his sister Mrs Margaret Morris to be thanked for the token she has sent him. 'Though the token was great I do twenty times more accept her great good nature and remembrance of me'. There follows a long list of College expenses including prices of second-hand books. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 423. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Sees not how it can be done 'for your doings ought to be also mine and mine yours'. Knows of neither commission, letters, direction, nor any other instrument which has given John Wynn or himself any limit. Therefore John Wynn is out of the way of good order and challenges over much privilege when he says that he will not meddle in the writer's limit. He speaks against Her Majesty's and the Lord Lieutenant's commission. William Maurice would not willingly do anything in John Wynn's absence, for he wishes his presence to join a company together. John Wynn's end of the country is more populous of serviceable men and greater by reason of the greater towns. John Wynn has objected to bringing men so far to Caernarvon, without thinking how far he brings men to Conwy, as though the case were altered. John Wynn has brought him examples from other shires, so he will bring to his correspondent the example of their next neighboring shire - Anglesey - where they do make the general assembly. Is quite sure that Sir Richard Bulkeley and his associates would as willingly spare the country as any other. Realising this, Wynn insisted on the division in all musters including foreign services. Besides the inequality of the number of people, Wynn's limit is the nearer by the half way to Chester, their common port, than the writer's limit. Which division of the muster William Maurice opposed and wanted it held at the shire town of Caernarvon. Wynn utterly refused this and mustered his company at his own door and used his own will and pleasure therein to the great hindrance of the service. Refers to the Lord President's personal command, his cousin and associate refuses to join and says that he has the Lord President's warrant to deal alone for his limit as he terms it. Clenennau letters and papers 435. vtls005594357 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn of Gwydir to his cousin William Maurice,	[1595/6], Feb. 9.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: William Maurice wrote suggesting that he and the writer send jointly for armour, powder and munition and munition to John Wynn's cousin, Robert, to be by them equally discharged. Knew not that William Maurice had sent for the same. His cousin Robert has taken order that each should answer for what he took. Touching the powder mise that was ceased and in part collected, it covers so much powder Robert sent which is all discharged. The powder he sent came to three score and odd pounds whereof William Maurice is to pay £28. John Wynn has paid £33 or thereabouts - he cannot tell certainly until he sees the note, for William Lloyd is not at home. William Maurice knows what John Wynn has paid the muster master - the rest being collected and in his hands, which is under £20. Means to send this spring for more powder to that value so that one penny shall not remain in his hands. Refers to £100 spent between them on munitions. Is £110 short. Therefore marvels that William Maurice should ask the writer to pay £22.10.0 for him. It cannot be employed for the purpose William Maurice desires - only for powder - and shall so be answered to the last penny. John Wynn has laid out part of it for the dressing of the armour in his limit especially what time he is to receive his part of the rest of the powder. The rest of the money John Wynn did not receive until the powder 'was come to the Conway'. What he had received and the very days shall be laid down. Reminds William Maurice that when he was in Gwydir and desired the moiety of the mise to his own hands, John Wynn showed him where it was still uncollected and would have given him the notes to collect the other half, but William Maurice refused them and said that he would deal only with Eifion and Cymydmaen and wished John Wynn to take payment for the rest. This John Wynn has done, and therefore he greatly wonders why William Maurice should desire the money John Wynn gathered to pay for 'your munition and furniture'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 435. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

For furnishing them there is allowed £4 for every man-for coat and hose of good broad cloth well lined, doublet, stocking, shoes and cap beside their arms. Clenennau letters and papers 437. vtls005594359 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wynn to William Maurice, high sheriff of Caernarfonshire, [1596], April 2. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: This Friday at 5 in the afternoon John Wynn received letters from the Privy Council. Copies enclosed. Muster day appointed at Caernarvon on Thursday next for the whole country to assemble. He meant to summon every gentleman and principal freeholder, by the pole if need be, at his house, by the constable of every hundred. Means also to press men for service and those of the choicest he can get, and he that will not effectually further it, the writer accounts him no good subject nor true hearted to his country. Urges William Maurice that there is no matter wherein he ought more to respect his credit than this. Therefore he should not either for friend or foe spare the tallest and likeliest men. Either John Wynn or William Maurice or both must see the men delivered to Lord Essex. The taunt which the Lord Lieutenant put in his letter can be borne better by John Wynn and William Maurice if it be general to all lieutenants in North Wales, but if it be special to the writer and his colleague it is not by them to be borne 'for I protest I desyre not to lyve the day wherein I shall be ashamed of my doyns or must be forced to bear so open a dysgrace, for what could he have said mor ... to despite us. I am persuaded that it was the secretary messenger that wrought us this blow because we wear not lyberale unto him ... but yf if wear to the expence of half I have I wyll cleere my credyt and wyll tell the secretary to his face that he is a lying knave'. William Maurice is to do the like if he carries the heart of a man. John Wynn does not wish that part of the letter to be read and asks William Maurice to bolt it out of the copy before it is sent to any man. 'For though we be cleere yett geeve not oure enemyes that advantage to understand that we are condemned in our Lord's conceat'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 437. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

These letters were sent to him by the Bishop to be executed in his absence since he is now commanded to give his attendance to preach before Her Majesty on Palm Sunday and Easter Day. Forasmuch as [the musters] meet at Conwy, and Anglesey at Beaumaris, on one day, and that being Friday, he cannot attend at both places 'if any because it is the court day'. In his early letters [Nos 75, 273, 286, 293] his signature appears as Thomas Owen, but internal evidence shows that the writer could not have been Thomas Owen, senior], to William Maurice. This evening, coming to London from North Wales, he received a letter from William Maurice by Mr Roberts. Understands that others are sent by Henry Hughes to be left with Mr Powel. These have not yet come to his hands. William Maurice need not excuse himself to the writer of any suspicion of sinister dealing concerning the matter between William Maurice and the writer's young cousin. He never believed any such conceit. Only this he knew (and therein found himself to be overmatched) that William Maurice was very wise, circumspect and politic in his matches and bargains and the writer of small experience and practice in such things. Therefore he opposed against William Maurice his cousin Henry Lloyd, and to second him his cousin Gwyn, as he thought men of indifferent good judgment in the affairs of the world. But he found them far inferior and weak to deal with William Maurice as by their offers did appear. For they left the ground given them to deal for a younger brother and passed too far the bounds of the offer limited. 'You like a wise buylder and proporcioned and squared all your demands with such arguments and reasons that they knew not when to detracte anything from them, but still tooke more and more from mee to adde thereunto'. He will never have any man to be umpire in these matters any more. Either it must be ended quietly between William Maurice and himself or not at all. Cannot come home any more. Sir Thomas Sicil and he have bargained and now they are in terms again of a second bargain, namely that he will buy it back again or exchange it with other lands which are pastures, 'for mine being arrable landes will not yield in this cuntry so great a profytt as inclosures, and the freeholders that are mixt with me will not sell me their part that I may enclose yt'. Is bound to attend Sir Thomas Sicil when his leisure serves. Does not account deferring of time a material point. Neither force nor bad dealing can be offered William Maurice's child in William Maurice's own country. 'I assure myself your affection and love towards me is permanent and fyrme, and therefore time breaketh no square unless you determyne on other courses to seeke land and therein I am as I yelded at fyrst minimus apostolorum'. Clenennau letters and papers 443. vtls005594365 ISYSARCHB54	File - Owen Thomas, Pencoed, to William Maurice, [?1599]. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Understands that there is a meeting this day at Caernarvon for conference to decide what mise should be imposed on the poor country towards furnishing a hundred soldiers for Her Majesty's service in Ireland. Owen Thomas intended coming. Indeed came as far as Llanaelhaearn. There of a sudden he was intercepted by a fit of ague which made him return. Asks to be excused. But urges William Maurice to have regard to the present state and poverty of the country. 'Soe shall you, Sir, remove that wrongfule conceite of you which by some of your privie adversaries hath bene formerly bruted (as you have partlie heard yourself). Winne the love of your countrey and drive some of your underminers to a non plus, which wold willingly and maliciouslie joine with you to any such proceedinge, and afterwards wold be the first that would by privie whisperinge emblaze your defame and discredit, such even with the best, as I can partlie tell, imposing the whole offence in you and setting themselves on cleere ground ... Whyle they have you to beat the bush they will be sure to catch the byrd'. Craves William Maurice's gracious favour for two of Owen Thomas's tenants - Richard ap Morice and Gruff' ap Ievan Lewis that they not be pressed. 'For the rest they can play the knaves and fawn upon others'. There is a tenant of Owen Thomas, a young fellow, a bachelor, who has played the knave with the writer, for having got a poor honest maid of the parish with child, a cousin german of William Morgan, the writer's cousin, whom Owen Thomas would have him marry. He utterly refuses it and denies to father it. He has since (notwithstanding he dwells on Owen Thomas's land) offered his service to another man. His name is Ievan ap Owen alias Evan Vaughan. If William Maurice thinks good he may send a warrant for him and let him either pay or go forward. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 443. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

He is to write how he profits from his studies, what authors his tutor reads to him, and what he spends weekly. He is to have care to serve God and to live as sparingly as he can. He is to consider his parents' means and great charge of children, insomuch that the writer cannot maintain any of the recipient's brothers at the University. 'Therefore prayse God that thou hast carefull parents to place thee in Oxenford, a famous University, the fountayne and wellhead of all learning. Keepe company with honest students who aphore evill courses as drinking and takeing toebacko to their own losse and discredit of their friends and parents whoe sent them to the University for better purposes'. The writer urges his son to be present at declamations and disputations and other exercises. He wishes him especially to be attentive to hear good sermons and to learn how to make brief notes and abridgements by figures and ciphers to express a whole sentence as the preacher delivereth. Any scholar having a swift hand may profit this way in receiving and observing all good sermons he hears. He should always have his paper book and ink ready to write what he likes best of sermons as well as other declamations and disputations. He is to call on his tutor or Mr Dr Ellis for any books or other necessities he wants. Wishes to know whether his son has received Owen's Epigrams by Edward ap William and what has become of his russet coat? His mother will provide him

	with a winter suit about Michaelmas and what other necessities he wants he must write at large that they may be provided. 'I will allow you noe servitor. Clenennau letters and papers 445. vtls005594367 ISYSARCHB54	File - William Maurice, to the Rt Hon. Sir [1599]. Robert Cecil, Principal Secretary, and one of HM Privy Council, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: William Maurice, late deputy lieutenant of Caernarfonshire, by the direction and at the request of the inhabitants of the said county, humbly informs his Honour that whereas the said county being a maritime county and open to Ireland and other foreign parts, and withal the most part thereof being a hilly, mountainous and bare country, and therefore rather spacious than populous, so the greatest number of men to be appointed for trained bands (and so certified to his Honour) in that county was but 400, which afterwards upon a second certificate, by reason of mortality that there happened, had to be diminished to 300. And whereas in all former levies wherein the county was best able, the proportion of men sent out of that county was but half the number of Denbighshire or Montgomeryshire and the third part of less of Shropshire (which may well allow five for one), yet some three or four years ago by some wrong suggestion or interference to his Honour, Caernarfonshire was doubly charged in levies of men and money, which has brought the county to extreme want of the one and defect of the other. Since July 1598, 515 men have been sent out of that poor shire, and no more out of Denbighshire or Montgomeryshire which should by any due proportion double their number, and not many more out of Shropshire that might treble their men well. Whereby Caernarfonshire was compelled to send forth not only diverse of the trained bands but also man necessary servants of husbandmen, so that there is now a great scarcity of both. Ask for relief in future. For example in Sept. last there went out of that poor county of Caernarfonshire three score and one, out of Shropshire but three score, which might better have spared 300. Clenennau letters and papers 447. vtls005594370 ISYSARCHB54	File - Morgan Wynne, Mynachdy, to Sir William Maurice, Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: According to William Maurice's desire, Morgan Wynne repaired to Llanymddifrie on Monday last, but by reason of the way being so far, by cause of the business the day before, it was greater noon before he could reach there. By then Sir Harry Johns was sworn and the book certified in the Town Hall in the presence of forty persons the most part townsmen. He questioned Sir Harry about some agreement with William Maurice. Found him somewhat obstinate relying upon two releases he had from 'my lady' his mother. One release was of the lands of Sir Thomas Johns and Rowland Puleston, dec., the other of all the goods, cattle, chattels of Sir Thomas Johns. He showed the releases to Morgan Wynne with witnesses thereupon endorsed. Morgan Wynne alleged a later composition between William Maurice and Johns. Then he showed a general acquittance under William Maurice's hand to undo the same estate bearing date a year after. In the end asked for a meeting to be had between the parties to see whether friends might draw them to some good agreement and he promised to come up to Llanbadarn on Wednesday or Thursday next come sevendnight with a couple of gentlemen and two servants. If William Maurice will travel so far again, although it will be to his great travail, the writer hopes that the mediation of friends will see a good composition made. Advises him to bring with him a couple of understanding gentlemen to mediate the matter. Endorsed: Account of Morgan Wynn's expenses. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 447. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	[?1610 x 1611], April 17.
Clenennau letters and papers 448. vtls005594371 ISYSARCHB54	File - Henry Johnes, to his servant Lewis Aldwell, Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: Would have him go to his wife's tailor and bid him to make her a velvet gown betwixt 20 or 30 piece of the best colour ladies wear except black. He must not fail to bring it home with him. Let it be laid with silver [lace] upon the 'whings' as fair as may be. If the tailor will not do it, he must go to Sir Baptist Higgs and bring home so much velvet as will make it. He is to bring home the bond from Watson touching the armour. Must not forget to bring home his master's livery as he did last time. Hopes he will	[?1606].

Clenennau letters and papers 449. vtls005594372 ISYSARCHB54	File - Sir William Maurice, to his son-in-law [Henry Johnes of Abermarlais], [?1605]. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: 'Good son'. Hoped that Henry Johnes would have had some opportunity to come and see his mother. It might have made atonement between them as was meet and convenient as nature doth bind. Wishes to meet him in London where 'my dear and honourable friend and your uncle, good Sir Thomas Harbarte, shall I hope moderate all matters'. Meanwhile desires to know his stepson's pleasure for all those small things he has there in order to procure more easily his mother's content and kindness. The first touches the benefice of Llanbeblig - 'I think you made me a promise of it or any other thing you had about Caernarvon'. Wishes to be advertised how it stands and how he is to have it; or is he to deal with the lessee of the late Bishop of Chester whom he hears means to try the title and validity of the lease? The second matter is Henry Johnes's house at Caernarvon. Asks him to part with the inheritance or give him a lease thereon. William Maurice would repair it as it greatly needeth. Asks for an answer by his man. In margin:- If Henry Johnes will be advertized by his stepfather in his business and bargains, he will find him as kind and ready to the uttermost of his skill as if he were his only natural child. Endorsed: This natural kindness caused William Maurice to write blaming Lewis Aldwell for his remiss dealing in Henry Johnes's matter and not any evil will to him or to seek to dissuade Johnes from his wonted favour unto him. For he can do well if he list, which made his fault the greater than if he had done what he did by ignorance. Hopes Aldwell will not now be able to dissuade him from hearkening to William Maurice's advice - There is much matter 'good son' which he would have him consider, for the writer knows women may be more peremptory for trifles than for great matters. His mother's claim to sheep (or black muttons), a gelding, and some other trifles - increases these five years. Wishes him to satisfy her herein 'which will be my inducement for her easier content in other matters'. Damaged. William Maurice has written so often and has long forborne. He knows not what to write for the sum is still increasing and the charges also. Therefore, his stepson [Henry Johnes] must give William Maurice leave to seek his own if he will not regard his promises nor the writer's wants. For the Sessions of Cardigan he promised the bearer that if William Maurice came there he would receive half the money in hand and the other with their use in May. But when he came thither no money was received though William Maurice wanted to go to the parliament and was so put to his shifts. This term will be chargeable to them both if no good course be taken for the writer's satisfaction. 'I would willingly pleasure you in anything I may though I did pawn my own land for you [but] I will not lease anything that is due to me by law for it is fitter your mother and I have our own than that you should let the same to others. I mean principally Llandeilo Fawr and such leases as you had for years'. Refers the full report to the bearer who is his cousin. Commits him to God whom he prays to make Henry Johnes careful for his good. Draft.

About the money, Ellis Brynkir brought her ten pounds, and William Maurice's servant, William ap William, 40s. The rest is promised by Sunday next, and Robert Lloyd will set out either Monday or Tuesday next with so much money as can be procured. Her son-in-law, Richard Evans, is being entreated to come to London to see what help he can be; Ellis also hopes to have twenty pounds of Richard Anwell if need be. A drover has kept Ellis's money - though he sends often for it, he cannot get it. Strangers have come the first week in Lent - namely her nephew Thomas Wyne of Morva Maure and his wife. She cannot get the money from John Gruffydd as yet, but he promises that he will get it shortly. She told him that if he did not get it out of hand, he would not get any bargain out of her brother. If she can get the money, she will, God willing, send it with the next carrier that comes down to London. It greatly grieves her heart that William Maurice stands in so much need of money. He should show his mind to Morris ap John ap Morris knowing he is a 'backe frind unto us all'. She would not for anything that William Maurice had

	sent Morris ap John ap Morris to William Lewis Anwill about Erw Syran. He said that he would give no money to redeem it. Claimed that the right is in himself for that bargain and that he goes to law with his mother-in-law for it. Therefore urges her good brother to do what may be done to get the money to hire from Sir Thomas Myddelton or of any other. He can have as much of Brynkir land except the house 'itself as will save him harmless'. She has heard that 'a complaint was maied agenst you for hir[i]nge a masse, but the Lord be thanked all the worldell kn[o]we that you lovid the kinge beter nor aney of them all exepte the pryve counsell'. She prays night and day for his Grace and for her brother likewise that he both speak and do what pleaseth his Grace. She heartily beseeches him to take care of himself and not to take geat matters 'so light as you will take smoke matters'. It is reported in the country that William Maurice is Sheriff in Merionethshire and Constable of Harlech. If it be true she prays him remember the [torn] bailiffe for her. If he can get no money in London, prays him send her word when he [intends] to come home and she will meet him at Oswestry to see whether her son-in-law Roger [ap] Hughe can get any money there ... to pass the danger of the day. William Maurice, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has received by the Oxford carrier his uncle's letter enclosing another from Lady Thomas wherein she seemeth to complain that her son wanted a chamber and many necessary things including a suit of apparel. Will account for it and other things when he comes to the country, which will be a fortnight before Christmas. In the meantime, Mr Dr Price, to whom William Brynker is much bound, keeps him there. He has no news from London more than William Williams can relate. Postscript: There was a casket found this week of my lord of Somerset wherein was found four score thousand pounds worth in jewels. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has been often beholden to William Maurice for many kind friendships. Assures herself that she will find him as loving as heretofore. Understands that her cousin, Mr Ellis Brynkir, purposes to trouble a nephew of hers (who with her consent matched with the grand-child of Richard ap Ievan ap Howel of Llanllyfni) with a suit for those lands which he enjoys by right of his wife. She was not desirous to entertain conference about the matter until his Worship was at home. Now if Mr Brynkir be pleased to come to any speech on the matter she will therein show herself more to his satisfaction, for his Worship's sake and her good cousin Mr Brynkir's mother, than she would do for any other in so unconscionable a cause. She is very confident in her nephew's title. She does not offer speech out of any distrust of the title ... but out of endeavour to continue good friends. Commendations to William Maurice and Lady Maurice, and to her good cousin, Mrs Anne Brynkir, 'who I know shall not be willing that any of her children should deal in such ungodly business'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 461. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

But this notwithstanding when he considers the matter more nearly, having had a taste of his cousin's mind and resolution, he draws back again, fearing his good intention will not produce any good effect. His cousin is settled in his opinion of right in the lands. He would rather lose all than accept any treaty offered to the contrary. But to make an exchange for lands of like value (though the lands lie convenient for him) William Jones thinks he will do by mediation. Is William Maurice inclined to that course? Father the Bishop of St David's touching the po[int] ... in question in the parliament. The subject of this letter William Maurice hardly liked. It allows diverse authorities for the proof not only of the convenience and justice thereof, but also of His Majesty's prerogative royal [if it so please] to finish the same. But his gracious clemency and mildness desires it rather [and therefore most convenient to effect it so] by general assent and consent of his true and faithful subjects. 'Your diligence in your collection with your choise of persone sufficient to sett ffoorth in parliament a cause, as you terme it, of so highe proporcion and consequence deserve the comendacion and doth manifest your grete reedinge of many auctorities and your good memorye which I will not prayse as it oght least you would judge mee to fflatter, for my cheefest purpose at this time is rather to expostulate with you for your unkinde (I maye well terme it) detraction of your owne contrey and countreyemen ... I meane the prediction or prophesye of coronoge vabann, and heerin I will rejoyne a littell with you sensiblye on that pointe and stand uppone the maxime of all our prophesyes which is that out of the Bryttishe line shold desende one that sholde restore the kingdome of Brittain to the pristine estate. This did Kadwalader, the last kinge of the Brittaines, prophesye at his departure. Thence cometh all our propheticall predictions and oracles. And though coronog vabann was the principal mark of him that would come of the British line, what reason or likelihood can there be that Henry VI (a mere Englishman, and moreover, a stem of the vile enemy of the Britons, his grandfather Henry IV) should be meant or imagined (though he like many others might have been crowned in the cradle) ... It is not so that 'our' nation first came to court in ... [the time] ... of Owen Tudor'. For though he happened to find favour in court with the queen mother of Henry VI, yet 'our' other countryman of the same name of Owen was a great favourite at the court of Richard II, which was the cause of his rebellion against the usurper, Henry IV. His great attempt, 'thoghe with a harde seccesse as many times the like doo', deserved greater commendation for holding out against a king fifteen years than the other for holding favour of a great queen. William Maurice will say no more, what he has said being sufficient to disprove 'bothe those your resones touchinge coronog vaban. The other unkinde glance or rather nipping of our country beirdd (who are muche more beeholdinge to Lucane, a stranger, for his good reporte) than to you theire owne [country]man ...' ... What learning most of them have the writer himself has not the learning to judge ... Compares the golden times of Homer, Virgil and Ovid ... with the verses made to Alexander only by Chorillus, the blind poet ... So now in this brazen world there are many Cherilli and few Homers or the like. Asks his cousin to remember that 'fowle is fowel that files his owne nest'. Exhorts him to show his skill and learning to speak the best of his own country, and to let strangers inveigh against 'us', who will not spare. And if he cannot find it in his heart to do it 'lende mee some of your skill to my goodwill and I will doo it'. Damaged; parts missing. Draft.

Clenennau letters and papers 488. vtls005594412 ISYSARCHB54	File - W. Hatfeild, at Llanden, to his landlord John Owen, esq., at Clennennau,	1628, 26th May.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The writer could wish that his word might have found that credit in Owen's belief which it seems the action of these few lines can perform. Owen cannot say as yet that the writer's word has not equalized his writing, and by the power of God it ever shall. He therefore confesses his just grief to find such a measure of distrust in Owen. But to the latter's better satisfaction, the writer assures him that at Michaelmas next he will pay the money now due according to the Statute at Midsummer: thereby he desires him to be confident. Clenennau letters and papers 489. vtls005594413 ISYSARCHB54	File - Owen Wynne, at Gwydir, to his cousin William Wynne at Glyn,	1630, 15th October.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: A friend and kinsman of the writer's has passed from His Majesty the township of Llandanwg wherein the town of Harlech stands. He means the gavells which, as he is informed, contain the several farms and rents subscribed. A list of eight tenements with their rents, including houses in Harlech, in the possession of Edward Humphreys, William Vaughan, Richard Owen ap Richard and Humphrey Frances, Robert Lloyd ap John Lloyd and, others. These his friend knows to be parcel of the gavells: there are others that are yet in doubt which the records do not clear. The gentleman who has them is ready to part with his interest to the tenants if they please. And because the writer understands that the matter concerns his cousin, William Vaughan, his cousin Owen, and Wynne himself - in right of his son who is matched with Edward Humphrey's grandchild, he acquainted William Vaughan's man, John Rees, of his intention of writing to the latter's master, and to Wynne, about this business: Rees told the writer to use his discretion towards Wynne, but for his master he knew he held his share of Harlech Castle, and in such sure manner, that his master feared no man's title. Therefore he has not written to Vaughan nor Owen. Now he turns to Wynne. If the latter should think it a kindness, the writer will do all he can to give Wynne content. But if Wynne slight it, as the rest do, then the writer will have to thank his friend for his love and leave him to try the title with the tenants. Asks him to acquaint such of the tenants as are his friends. PS Encloses a note of the gavells that are passed. Desires to receive from Wynne the writing he promised him. But let no man know that the writing is being sent, and when this has been read let it be blotted out. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 489. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 490. vtls005594414 ISYSARCHB54	File - Owen Wynne, at London, to John Owen, esq., High Sheriff of Merionethshire,	1631/2, 16th January.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:

	The writer at the entreaty of his cousin Thomas ap Rice Wynne - who had some care of the Brynkir estate and who since by reason of his grandchild's death has shaken off the care of that estate - and because of his love for Owen and of his friends and kindred thereabouts, has caused the business of Ffridd Pennant to be passed in fee-farm from the King, and the intent then was that each one of the freeholders thereabouts might buy his overall parcel and so shut out the common adversary, Mr John Gruffydd. Now the latter by all possible means is trying to get this fee-farm into his own hands. The writer continues to hinder him, but he desires Owen to call together the heir of Brynkir, John Johnes of Penmorfa, John ap Hugh of Braich-y-Bib and others whom the matter may concern, and press them to certify their resolutions to the writer whether they would have him deal for them, so that they may have the lease - each man to buy his own - or let the owner of the lease make the best benefit of it. John Gruffydd has made large offers for it already and has had a hint of a commission of survey in Ffridd-y-Pennant, which the writer is sure he could learn of none but of Tom Wynne of Bodean to whom in friendship the writer showed a copy of the survey and depositions which he had some three years ago, not thinking then that use would be made of them to hurt his friends. Gruffydd has not been ashamed to tell the gentleman who bought the lease that Ffridd-y-Pennant is worth £100 a year and that 'all of you have it intermyngled amonge your freehouldes and that you cannot be without it'. And all this he has done to make it dearer for the tenants. Now that the writer has done the part of a friend and kinsman, he leaves the rest to them, desiring them to have care that they give not him that desires their hurt that advantage as to have law on his side for a colour to do that against them there which otherwise he cannot and dares not do. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 490. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 493. vtls005594417 ISYSARCHB54	File - William Williams, at Whitehall, to William Wynne at Glyn,	1635/6, 28th February.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Hopes to hear of Wynne's success in his journey home: is sure that Mr Meyrick would furnish him with mirth enough to pass away the time. The writer's cousin, Elize Wyn, and Mr Morris Annwyl are in good health, and with the writer's chiding the latter has quite given over tobacco taking. He has moved their lodging further into King Street - at a scrivener's house: they have a very complete chamber for 2/6 a week: in the other place where they lay before, the writer paid 4/- a week and not so complete a place. His cousin, Elize, has had his suit made very complete, and the cloak made into a coat, and new boots and a hat, and now goes very complete and carries himself very civil and decent. He tried to get a place for him, but the party came but seldom to court. Desires him to ask Mr William Lewis Annwyl to send the writer's uncle, Morris, some money with all the speed he can to buy him some clothes that he may be fit for a service. He also entreats a suit for himself: desires to borrow £200 for his preferment - for there are six commissioners chosen for the settling of the Prince's house at the beginning of May: he has had a grant of the place by means of good friends. Desires to be remembered to his Aunt who will receive by the bearer a pair of the King's gloves as a token of the writer's service. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 493. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The writer's poor wife is extraordinary sick and past help in this world - God send her a happy hour of departure to her Almighty Maker. That his father is not amended does aggravate his sorrow, although there is no danger in his malady, but some pain for a time. Asks that his brother, William Wynne, be sent to him at once, for he wants comfort in his extremity. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Being that Mr Evans is to repair to those parts, the writer could not do less than present his respects being that he had so faithful a lover of Wynne to convey them. Mr Evans's zeal, indeed, to keep his living is the greater in that it is convenient and serviceable for Wynne. His enemy, and 'our Doctor', boasts that he will have one more trial there with him, which if he do - and the writer doubts it - then the writer will believe that he is offered by some in those parts: otherwise he would hardly bring a baffled title to a disadvantageous hearing again. Touching some other differences between the Doctor, his brother, and the writer, there is a fair stay in respect of what has happened, and even almost to a small accommodation. But the writer had already told the Doctor that he would in no way be wanting in befriending Mr Evans,

	and in opposing him in all lawful ways so long as he hinders Mr Evans in this living. The shires and corporate towns of North Wales are required to provide one ship, of four hundred tons, furnished with men, tackle, munition, victuals and other necessities, as mentioned in a former writ. The charge of a ship of that burden so manned and furnished will be four thousand pounds, whereof it is conceived that the county of Merioneth may well bear four hundred and sixteen pounds which the sheriff is to levy with as much equality and indifference as he possibly can. They enclose the extracts of their hundred for the ship-money made by the ablest gentlemen in that allotment according to the warrant, which has been the whole employment of the constables this last fortnight. With regard to the divisions and subdivisions of every taxation a general meeting of the prime men was held to see the sums equally distributed according to the Ancient custom, and cessors were appointed within each division. The latter required the constables' presence to further the said service which has been a daily toil to them and some expense. All which considered they humbly desire Wynne to ease them of further doing, and to appoint some other collectors as former sheriffs of this and bordering counties have done on like services. PS The sheriff is to observe the marginal note which points out in what parish each township lies, for it is confusing to set each parish in particular by reason of the divisions and mixtures of the ancient customs of the country. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 497. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1636, 13th November.

His wants are much increased by this 'visitation' in London where the writer has been forced to ride it out all this year for lack of money. He has been slow in his demands, since he has often expected Owen up in London as informed by Lord Powis and others. He also directed some letters to Owen at the end of the last Easter term with the bill enclosed. The post assured him that the letter would be delivered in a few days at the house of Owen's brother to be sent with speed to him. 'But all men render you soe noble and just in all your actions that the letter could not (have) come unto you without a faire returne'. 	The writer's son, Evan, continues his suit for Wynne's niece of Tan-y-bwlch, and now she has promised to marry him if Wynne will but say the word. She says she is now growing old and her father is backward in bestowing her. Asks that she be told that the writer will give Evan £300 which will be paid at the rate of £100 a year upon every New Year's Day yearly. The bill for £10 was delivered to one who had more honesty than law, and made by one who used more subtlety than good conscience. They will perhaps make the Dr pay his debts in spite of his own and his brother's cunning. He has spoken to Mr John Jones concerning the business of the fine sought by Wynne's daughter. He also understands for a certainty that Mr Justice Littleton resolved not to take any lodging in any gentleman's house, and therefore he was confident that the justice would not accept an invitation to Clennau where he was a mere stranger. Thereupon the writer ventured to tender Wynne's respects to the justice and to let him know Wynne's desire to give him the entertainment his house afforded. The justice seemed very loath to trouble Wynne, but at length being half persuaded, he referred the writer to his brother, Mr Justice Beerwood. In fine, they are both willing to accept the kind offer and will be at Glyn on Saturday night. The writer will wait on their boats from Caernarvon and be their guide over the sands to Glyn. Further legal business. Asks Wynne to get Mr Pool's deed into his hands once more. Would rather lose all his interest in the rectory than be baffled out of any part of his right. Understands from his friends in London that he is likely to have an injunction out of the Exchequer to settle him in quiet possession until he be ejected by due course of law. He has many other irons in the fire which he supposes will somewhat gall his little nimble friend there. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 512. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Has delivered his father's letter also to Robert Owen who said that he would be very glad to get him a place next term, because one can hardly get a place in vacation time. But the writer would rather have some lean place in the Court to begin with, hoping thereby to come to preferment. Would like to know whether his father would like him to board with his cousin Williams, or else abroad as he does now. Would gladly have some money to buy meat, for little will serve him. Clenennau letters and papers 514. vtls005594438 ISYSARCHB54	File - Michael Evans, at Baron Hill, to William Wynne at Glyn,	1638, 17 July.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Details of the action against Dr Cheadle. Has sent the commission to take Wynne's answers, and asks that the enclosed note be subscribed by Mr Morris Wynne and Rowland Lloyd and sent back by the bearer, so that the writer may give Dr Cheadle notice of the time and place in which the answers will be made. Longs to know for certain if Owen Poole's lease is in Wynne's hands: it concerns the writer's title very much, and he beseeches Wynne, if he has it not already, to get it with what speed he can. Asks for writings at the assizes there to prove Wynne's debt against the Doctor. The assizes begin on the 13th August. Wants to know how Wynne stands in alliance with Pierce Lloyd, 'our sheriff'; he thinks it is by the latter's wife. Begs him to search amongst his letters from the Doctor to see if there are any acknowledging the debt of £10. He hopes that there is no interruption for any part of the tithes this year: he forbears to persecute the poor men of Llandecwyn with the attachments, but he will let them know their danger, and make them confess themselves as beholding more to an honest enemy than a false friend. He has sent Wynne the copies of the Lords' speeches at his lordship of Lincoln's censure, which he may keep until they meet: Wynne will find them well worth the reading. He will not fail to be in Wynne's parts about the middle of the week before the sessions that he may prepare all things for the trials. He hopes with God's blessing that the summer will grant a period to all encumbrances about the rectory. He doubts not that Wynne has heard of the lamentable loss which the Hollanders sustained before Antwerp: seven regiments of Scots and Dutch clean cut and defeated by the Cardinal and Piccolomini. The Prince of Orange is forced to take most of his old soldiers out of garrison to reinforce his army. The French besiege St Omers and they say it is either taken or not likely to hold out long. The Swedes are still strong in Germany. The Scotch affairs are not yet fully composed. Marquis Hamilton, who has been there these six weeks to pacify the mutineers, had not come back about a week since: his arrival will satisfy the State upon what terms things stand there and what is to be done will be then concluded of. There has been nothing done in his lordship of Lincoln's business these two last terms: he was once in some possibility to work his peace and enlargement. The writer hears he has been of late, as heretofore, too much his own enemy. There is a writ of error brought by Mr Hambden on the business of the ship mise, and as the writer is informed there are some gentlemen and others who stand out anew, and will put the cause to a second argument: it was only judge Jones's voice that made the inequality. Greetings from Mr Bulkeley. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 514. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 518. vtls005594442 ISYSARCHB54	File - Michael Evans, at Baron Hill, to William Wynne at Glyn,	1638, 19th November.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Mr Ffyner has some occasions to visit those parts, and the writer cannot let him pass without a letter, though he has neither business nor news. He supposes that Wynne knows who are the sheriffs-men of great sufficiency in almost all the six shires of North Wales, so that he much wonders how Wynne's neighbour came to be thrust in amongst them. If Wynne can guess any reason for it or has heard any probable surmise, the writer would be glad to understand it by the bearer. The gentleman has heretofore appeared against the writer, but the latter doubts not that he will find the new sheriff indifferent being an officer and upon oath, and surely Wynne's interest in him cannot but prevail forthwith to make him just in those businesses. If the writer has any cause to doubt it, he knows of a way to procure indifference in the return of juries and other proceedings. He will be very glad to hear that the commission has been sent up with Wynne's answer: the foot-post could not possibly come over by reason of floods and tempests. He has heard recently from Rob Lewis: all the news concerning himself is that Dr Cheadle moved to have a new reference about the taxation of the costs. It is ordered that Dr William Griffith consider once more whether they were duly taxed. Wynne may have heard the whole story of the Queen Mother's arrival and entertainment. There have been three or four 'clapt up' for certain scandalous words derogatory to Her Majesty 'and intrinsing somewhat upon the wisdom of this State'. There is a book come forth in print lately, in the name of Marquis Hamilton, which is a declaration of the 'passages' in Scotland: he cannot

	relate the particulars but they express the justice of His Majesty's proceedings. His lordship of Lincoln is debarred the visit of friends and is no better than a close prisoner. Cannot understand why they have not been received. Since the business was not great, the miscarriage is of so much the less consequence. Mr Meredith Price commends the enclosed paper. The present letter is being sent by Mr Rowland Vaughan who promises to be careful in conveying it. Is confident it will not miscarry. Knows that his cousin expects news whereof he can give no particular account but in the general. Tempora mutantur and all things are become new. The hopes of this present Parliament are great but as yet no act is passed. Divers grievances are put in and it is supposed divers delinquents (faded) suffer. But all are at a stay until the great business of the Church is settled and some grand offenders come to their trial such as the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland - whose day is assigned for next Wednesday - and others. There is great notice taken of papists, and their ways narrowly looked unto. Knows that Owen has heard of a commission Lord Worcester had last summer - to which the Council was not privy - for the same and other practices in their Catholic cause. His Lordship together with Sir Percy Herbert are sent for to give account. The office of bishop is like to continue notwithstanding the petition of fifteen thousand Londoners and others who petitioned against the branch and root thereof. But a select committee is appointed to examine and find out those who are faulty - as is supposed most of them are - who shall not want condign punishment. The judges are now in play. Judge Barclay is already accused of high treason and committed to the Black Rod. The rest will follow. 'And I believe by this time doe wish they had provided shippes with theyr owne money and lett the subject alone and doe as my Lord Finch did'. The writer's brother, James, is well and so are the rest of the Caernarvonshire gentlemen. He is bound to appear when he is called on, but the House is busy about matters of greater weight, so that the committee to which that business was referred sits not this month as is supposed. Has been asked to tell him that John Vaughan of Caergai was bound for that debt as surety for Price together with Howel ap Morgan Thomas. John Vaughan's lands were extended several times for the debt. When he died, Rowland Vaughan pleaded his entail by which he has since received his estate in the Exchequer, and Sir John Banks, the late King's attorney-general confessed that all the seizures were discharged. Although it is not for him to commend his own, he is confident that his son - 'howsoever nature hath given him but a rough hew' - will be a loving husband being his mother's most likely child and darling. He will expect Wynne with God's 'agifting' hand to appoint the happy day to unite 'our imps' in as loving a way as they began to treat of the business at first. References to the marriage settlement and the engrossing of the covenants by the writer's cousin Rowland Lloyd. He will not doubt of Wynne's fidelity in engrossing them truly, for to have serjeant's opinion concerning them would be superfluous: he will boldly say that all the lawyers in England will not bind a dishonest man from cavil and contention, whereas fewer lines will securely tie the honest minded heart. Clenennau letters and papers 526. vtls005594450 ISYSARCHB54	File - Penelope Owen, at Corsygedol, to her brother, William Owen, at Porkington, 1641, 8 October. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Whereas Owen expects to receive much money from Mr John Brynkir that he may still continue his tenant, she believes he cannot perform. Her father Vaughan left fifteen kine upon the land, and Brynkir covenanted to restore the same in kind or as good in their stead. Her brother will find him loth to part with any that are good, and if he be put to leave any in May, he intends that they shall be 'ffarrowe cotees'. Suggests that the best way is for her brother to write her a letter that will authorize her to call for the cattle from him, and to write him a letter himself willing him to deliver them to her, so that they may be sold together with the rest. These being taken from Brynkir, she knows not how he will stock his tenement. He is not worth much unless he has an unknown estate, and the sooner her brother parts with him, it will be the less to his loss. There are no fairs in those parts but All Hallows and St Andrews when

	a few steers and yearlings may be marketable. But first she desires to know whether the goods and cattle are to be priced before they are sold. His rates are now too high. If he wishes her to sell as many as she can get money for, she will do the best the markets will afford, and the rest to a sufficient creditor at a reasonable rate. Parson Morgan's mother desires his 'whitmeat' at a reasonable day and will give good security for the money. There is no great inquiry for any yet, but the longer his is kept the worse it will be. His sheep, corn and hay will yield s(mall) money until the spring and then all may be well sold. He has about 100 lbs. of wool - three wax weights in a pound - which may be sold at about 2/- a lb. or more if he will give days of payment. There are divers honest men who would gladly have 'both Corsygedols' and would finely pay the rent, which would be better than to sustain a great loss by Mr Brynkir. The latter holds another tenement worth £24 yearly, and a ffridd which he lets and bargains to others, and receives the rents and profits, always to get as deep as he can into her sister's debt and to leave her in the lurch when he is free to leave her lands. Would have her brother give him warning to avoid his lands, and to lay the fault on her saying that she was earnest on behalf of some other party and that he could not deny her, and adding that if any other had continued lands during a minority of a ward, not paying his rent, the Court of Wards would soon put him out. Owen has three kine feeding: one is indifferent fat, and the other two do not feed half well: two other kine be broken bellied and a two-year old bullock which will not live this winter. She would know his pleasure concerning them and have an answer to all the above-written. Additional notes in another hand. The mill finds the house bread. May be let at £12 per annum. Four of the tenants are backward in coming to the mill course: must be compelled to do so with the Court of Wards. Rowland received some part of this year's rent which he is willing to pay at Holt Fair: to be paid to Mr William Owen in London if Mr Owen sends to Holt for it. (About £14 in margin). Mrs Anes Wen's dower - about 26/- yearly - she had of the writer's mistress but 2/- which she is contented to take this year, but afterwards she challenges the whole. To acquaint Mr William Owen how many servants there be at Corsygedol and to know if he will have the dairy-maid put away at All Hallows Tide and hire another so long as occasion shall require, otherwise she will challenge a continuance of her place until May. To know whether Rowland may have the cattle, corn and hay and either or both Corsygedols at a reasonable rate, or some other convenient tenement, for he will not stay where he is any longer than May. To know about the sowing of winter corn by parts or otherwise. To know about Edwin ap Thomas and how many tenants have not paid the last year's rent and how much is due from each of them. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 526. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

If it be so, desires Price to hold the bond with him until such time as they may have his advice and that of others in the matter. Price's answer subscribed. Thinks that Mr Morgan has no meaning but good towards Wynne. Has looked through the assurances and has found it to be Is-Artro where he thinks there be several of Mr Morgan's patents: but the writer thinks it is good enough. He has not the patent with him, but thinks the statute helps such misprisions in patents. Having seen Robert Edwards, he acquainted him with it and told him that they should be well advised of it. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 527. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 528. vtls005594453 ISYSARCHB54	File - Thomas Mytton, at Robert Bootle's at the Sign of the Crown, Black Friars, to (John Owen),	1642, 2 July.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Sir. Would have written by the last post, but he came to town so late that he could not learn with certainty all the business standing on the militia and the commission of array. It was moved in the House on Tuesday that the King should waive the commission of array and Parliament desist in the militia. But it will not yet be condescended to. As soon as he has any certainty he will let his correspondent know. Fears that his stay will be longer than he intended by reason of his uncle's weakness. Letters were read in the House yesterday that Gustavus Horne, Prince Robert, (the Lord) Digby, Jermin, etc.: are coming to Newcastle with a great store of ammunition: others say for a pacification. The writer conceives these no fit agents therein. 'Believe what you please'. There is a speech here very fresh that the commission of array is to come speedily to Salop. Sir Richard Newport, Sir Richard Ley, William Fowler, Thomas Screven, Francis Thornes, Richard Lloyd, commissioners. He hears of no other. Through the kingdom they intend, it is said, to alter all the commissions for the peace. For the common cause the writer has sat up all night, and truly his coming up was very requisite therein. They will not join issue but say they have an order from the judge for stay until next term. He proposes to take strong action in the matter, for as the case stands he longs to have a skirmish with them. Though Andrew Lloyd bragged that he had overthrown David ap John's title which now they are not willing to [do] justly with. Asks that his cousin Powel be certified thereof especially the two valiants Jack and Dick Lloyd. 'There is a booke come out fitte for my cousin your wife's readinge. If she has not seene yt I will bringe it down with me. It is an apologie for privat preachinge which I hope with my persuasive opinions will convert her. I have sent you one pamphlet herewith.' Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 528. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 539. vtls005594464 ISYSARCHB54	File - The King, at Oxford, to the Sheriff of Merionethshire,	1643, 13th November.

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The state of Ireland. Many of the soldiers there being English protestants are coming over to and are daily expected to land in some of the counties of North Wales. Rebellious subjects were the promoters of the rebellion in Ireland, and now they untruly charge the King, on the occasion of the coming over of the soldiers, with bringing over the Irish rebels. Since the rebels have lately forced their passage over Holt Bridge and obstructed all the ways to Chester, orders have been given to the soldiers from Ireland to repair to those parts (of North Wales) for succour. The county of Merioneth having been freed of many burdens which other counties have sustained in the paying and free billeting of soldiers, the King's will and command is that there be provided, at the charge of the county, cloaks, shoes, stockings, and apparel sufficient for 500 men, and likewise victuals for 4,000 men for fifteen days, or money sufficient for the same use to be brought forthwith to Conwy where a magazine has been provided. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 539. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 540. vtls005594465 ISYSARCHB54	File - Rowland Vaughan at Caergai, to his brother-in-law, William Wynne, esq., at Glyn,	1643/4, 14th March. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: If Wynne could help the writer with four or five pounds and send them by the bearer they would be very acceptable - if only forty or fifty shillings they will come not amiss. Is forced to buy all his oat seed. Thought he had some to sell; but his men made the best into meal and kept till last what would not serve its turn. Wants Wynne to speak to John ap Rhydderch Owen to give the writer some reasonable time before he delivers any writ to the sheriff for his cousin Gr. Lloyd's debts. Acknowledges that he must pay them. Does not expect to be able to draw his cousin to any rational end. PS Has no news except that Prince Rupert took some forty men on Tuesday last near Liston Castle, and four score the week before near Drayton. Sends Dr Denier's letter with state news. Has been told this day that their cousin, Edward Vaughan, is proclaimed a delinquent in Montgomeryshire assizes. Clenennau letters and papers 541. vtls005594466 ISYSARCHB54	File - Robert Corbet, at Ynysymaengwyn, to William Wynne and Griffith Lloyd, esq's,	1643/4, 23rd March. Crëwr / Creator: Corbett, Robert, -1644 Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The imminent danger which threatens the 'country' has moved him to crave the aid and power of the county against the invasion of those 'bloudy' enemies who seek their ruin. The sheriff and the commissioners of array appointed a meeting on Tuesday last, where the appearance of both Wynne and Lloyd was expected for the furtherance of the public safety. The sheriff has afforded the writer good encouragement by his free giving of those arms which were in readiness - those which were in Mr Nanney's custody. Those in his correspondents' custody were expected, which would with other fowling and straggling pieces 'we pitch upon' make a considerable force and strength. By their not coming, the design in hand could not be completed. Nevertheless he cannot distrust their affections and willingness to promote so good a work. Asks for the arms received from the magazine and store house of the county

	to be delivered. The sheriff is expected there on Monday next with the arms from Mr Nanney. The fire-arms which they have received be 24 in number - if they have more, hopes they will not deny them on this occasion. 'Assure yourselves upon my credit that what you send shall be faithfully kept and referred unto you backe if God preserves us with our lives and liberty ... and shall bee ready upon your call to contribute our whole assistance unto you if any danger or assault shall attempte you'. Desires them to convey the arms to Barmouth where the country with their sollicitation will assist them. From thence 'we' shall take care for their further carriage. 'Consider gentlemen, though this requeste be ours, it is the business of his sacred Majesty whose expectation to assist him in the present rebellion does as much oblige this our prosecution as the care of our own safety.' Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 541. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Sir. He has long since, seeing the danger which now is evident, made several journeys into Wales and written volumes of letters to the several counties therein to put themselves into such a posture, by uniting their forces together, as might not only defend themselves but offend any that should attempt upon them. In answer to which he has hitherto had only fine promises and no performance at all. What the writer foretold then is now come to pass, Brereton, Middleton, and Mitton being now drawn all about this city, with their united forces. This morning they sent over a strong party of horse and foot into Wales to possess the pass at Holt, which they may easily do, there being no more forces here than are just requisite for the defence of the garrison. 'You that are a soldier as well as their countryman, I hope, will take these things to heart, and advise them rather to march to the frontiers of their country and repel the rebels there than to admitt them to their bowells'. Prince Maurice is on the march towards Shrewsbury, and General Gerard, the writer hears, has taken Cardigan. 'So that you have no enemy but what is either before or amongst you'. Desires Owen speedily to raise the posse of his county and speedily march into Denbighshire where the writer hopes they will be ready to join with Owen and march as near to Chester as they can according to the intelligence which they hear. The writer expects advertisement of their march. His own regiment of horse, and those of Colonels (Trevis?) and Worden, will be ready to meet them, so many as there are. He doubts not that Owen's neighbour and his worthy friend, Mr Jones, will join with them. Then he doubts not that with God's blessing the rebels will have reason to repent that journey into Wales as much as they did their former. Dorse. 3 o'clock in the afternoon 29th Jan. 1644. Haste, haste, post haste. J.B. Received the 30th January at seven o'clock at night. Sends his Grace herein enclosed the result of the several meetings the gentlemen of Denbighshire and Flintshire have had together concerning the preservation of those counties, and their desire that the other three counties of North Wales should associate themselves with them. It comes late, but better late than never. Is sure the fault is not his who three months ago foretold them what now is happened. Humbly desires his Grace - according to the trust reposed in him by the King for advising those counties in like cases to their own good - to deal effectually and speedily with this business, and with their united forces march towards Chester which is now almost surrounded by the united forces of Brereton, Middleton, and Mitton. A strong party is sent on the Welsh side to make good the Pass of Holt. Sir John Owen is a soldier, as well as their countryman, and therefore - since they must have a commander in chief - the writer desires that they should make choice of him in that service. 	Is glad to hear of the country's resolution to march under Owen's command. Orders to march on Denbigh. On intelligence of Owen's advance the writer will send further orders as the situation then requires. Meanwhile Owen is to keep correspondence with the forces of the counties of Denbigh and Flint commended to the care of Sir Edmund Verney who has been given order to keep intelligence with Owen. They are at present quartered about Northop and Mold - two thousand strong. The Prince is upon his march at Shrewsbury with a considerable force, and the writer doubts not that he will be suddenly in those parts. Desires Owen to bring with him as much provisions, ammunition, etc., as possible. Wishes to hear frequently from him. The writer hopes very shortly to receive an assurance of their advance into these parts by way of Denbigh and Ruthin where Owen shall receive further orders. The forces of these two counties are for the present committed to the order of Sir Edmund Verney, Colonel of Foot, whose industry and abilities have wrought him very much into the good opinion of the officers and soldiers and to some improvement of their discipline. In view of Owen's interest in his countrymen, the writer wishes him to accept the office of Major-General of those forces under His Highness and the writer. Upon intimation of acceptance, the writer will send power for its execution. Desires to know Owen's number, strength and arms and with what store of ammunition he marches. Can assure him of the advance of the Prince to Shrewsbury with a very good force and doubts not to hear of him 'here' very shortly. His Grace's letter of the 4th instant received this morning. In the writer's answer to the Archbishop's former letter he has said all he can. At the same time he likewise writes to Sir John Owen. Owen has received orders to march with all speed to Denbigh. The other Welsh forces are now at Ruthin. It was ever the writer's intention that Sir John Owen should have the command in chief of all the Welsh forces next under the Prince and himself. Sir Edmund Verney, who does the duties of Major-General for Flint and Denbighshires, is so discreet and well tempered a man, as well as a good soldier, that the writer hopes there will be no dispute at all, and Sir John Owen will find himself much eased by his assistance and that of other officers that are with him, in the ordering of the raw multitude. The writer that day received a letter from Maurice, who came to Shrewsbury on Tuesday night last. He will bring considerable new forces along with him, between

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: In pursuance of an agreement with Prince Maurice to advance £200 for provision of ammunition in Ireland, a proportion of that value has arrived from the Marquis of Ormonde with directions where to pay the money due, there being only £80 of the £200 paid in Ireland. The writer has sent directions for the conveyance of the ammunition to Chester. Requests their uttermost aid and assistance for the conveyance thereof, and that the money due therefore upon their own agreement be forthwith paid to Mr John Wilson, Secretary of the Army under the writer's command. Expects also a speedy account and performance for the provisions agreed to be raised in Caernarvonshire for the victualling of Chester. Hitherto no performance has been made, and he has sent Commissary Hassall for a third time to endeavour to get it with a special commission for that purpose. Threat of severe proceedings if there is any further delay, which they may be assured he has the power to do. Sends a copy of a commission received from Prince Rupert. PS The commission mentioned in this letter is upon occasion of an address to His Grace of York, which the writer doubts not will be by him communicated to them: otherwise at his next sending, he will enclose a copy. The design is plotted and promoted by one Corbett, a flaxen-haired young man who is said to have a counterfeit commission under the supposed hand of Prince Rupert. Their plot is represented to be intended by shipping from Liverpool where they intend to ship some numbers of men and with them to sail with the King's colours into one of the North Wales harbours upon pretence of coming from Ireland to serve His Majesty. Holds it fit to give Owen some account thereof that such vigilance may be used as becomes His Majesty's service. (copy). Whereas the safety of the county depends upon the fortifying and victualling of the garrison towns, castles and forts, the writer by authority of a commission vested in him by Prince Rupert requires them or any four of them, whereof Sir John Mennes to be one, to take a course for the speedy collection of arrears of contributions for the support of the several garrisons and castles of Caernarvon and Conwy and for their victualling with sufficient provisions for six months, according to the establishment formerly made by Prince Rupert. The inhabitants of the towns and adjoining hundreds are to do all works tending to the security of the said towns, castles and garrisons. The Advocate Marshal of North Wales is to certify the writer or whom he shall appoint - in the absence of Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice - of those who prove refractory or negligent, and they shall be punished by a council of war or otherwise. And since it is evident that unequal rating and levying of the mises of the county of Caernarvon, wherein the tenants and meaner sort bear the greatest share, contrary to the King's instructions and the proceedings of other parts, do very much [word missing] the King's service, the writer requires that upon all rack rents the landlord bear two parts of the contribution and the tenant a third, and that generally there be all fitting ease and impartiality used to the meaner sort. And whereas he is assured that Robert Jones, the late sheriff of Caernarvon, has expended much in fortifying the town of Caernarvon whilst he was sheriff, and being likewise entrusted for the future with the care and government of that garrison and of his sheriffwick of Anglesey, he should receive some considerable recompense and allowance for his necessary charges. Clenennau letters and papers 572. vtls005594498 ISYSARCHB54	File - Lord Byron, at Chester, to Lieut.- Colonel William Owen, High Sheriff of Merionethshire, Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: Has received by the bearer Owen's account of his endeavours in observance of His Highness's commands, and in the business of the stirke mise. But hitherto the writer has received no account touching the men, money and provisions for His Highness's command. He sent a letter of yesterday's date signifying His Highness's pleasure therein. As for the provisions for Chester, he desires that the business receive Owen's best care and expedition, the speedy performance whereof is of special concern to the King's service and the safety of the garrison. As for the Prince's seal moneys, he assures Owen that there is such extraordinary occasion for money and so many commands from the Prince touching the business, that he must desire him to return the names of defaulters against whom, he is assured, there will be speedy proceeding. As for the powder which is sent from Ireland upon the public account, it is by His Highness's express command to be brought to Chester, so that the writer may not order any part thereof to any other use. There is one, Mr Hilton, who is now at Beaumaris, a merchant of Chester, who has there a considerable proportion of match and powder upon his own account, which, for the King's service, the writer doubts not Owen may receive of him for money at reasonable rates. He has no more for the present save to desire Owen's uttermost diligence in affairs of public concern. Nodyn Note [generalNote]:	1645.

Sends them with a flying seal so that Owen may survey the contents thereof and disperse them with all possible speed. Clenennau letters and papers 577. vtls005594503 ISYSARCHB54	File - Lord Byron, at Chester, to Sir John Owen, High Sheriff of the County of Caernarvon, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Owen's letter of the 14th was received on the 26th of this instant, whereby Owen, he perceives, makes some question touching the meaning of the writer's last letter. If it is compared with the letters therewith sent to the commissioners of array of the several counties of North Wales, he is confident that his meaning will very easily be manifest. It requires that the men, arms and money agreed to be raised in the several counties towards the recruitment of His Highness's army should be forthwith perfected and performed. They are to be committed to the care and conduct of Owen himself and Colonel Thelwell. Continues to desire an effectual proceeding therein, whereof, he is assured, His Highness expects a very good account. As for the men pressed in Caernarvonshire and sent to Wrexham, they were at the desire of Colonel Thelwell and for their better preservation - being unable to lie there safe without arms - ordered, by the conduct of their officers, to march to Conwy to be kept together there. As for the present distractions of the counties of North Wales by the enemy's incursion, the writer would wish that the unanimity of those parts and their resolution had been such as might easily have given some check to the rebels if they had joined with those horse he ordered unto them for their succour. He cannot but wonder that so inconsiderable a force can ramble up and down without the least opposition when he knows that upon the last invasion 2,200 men well armed were in the counties of Flint and Denbigh in an instant drawn together. Prays for Owen's continued industry. Dorse The letter was opened by the direction of His Lord Grace of York. The King has thought fit to signify that if Owen has solid grounds and testimony against the Archbishop, the latter should not be exempt from question and Owen will have done his duty in accusing him. But, on the other side, the Archbishop being a person who has given eminent testimony of his affection for the royal service and whose power and interest in those parts may yet be of great use to the King, Owen should be very cautious how he proceeds to lay imputations of so high a nature upon him. The King requires Owen, unless the matters objected against the Archbishop are of great moment and the proofs very material, to forbear any further proceeding until the King is satisfied about the particulars. Meanwhile all animosities are to be laid aside, and Owen is to pay to the Archbishop all fitting respect: he is to concur with him as Lord Byron will advise 'in the ways of our service'. Therefore the King believes that there will be no need to use invitations to inflame in them a sense of those miseries, or to apply themselves to the only way of preventing them by entering into a universal association among themselves and with those of South Wales for their own just defence 'which wee recommend to you for a patern in this behalfe' ... Urges them to raise forces and to place garrisons in all such places as shall be fit for their better security and for keeping the passes open between them and South Wales, by the advice and assistance of Lord Byron, the Commander in Chief in those parts. That they may have all due encouragement the King assures them that he will accept all such governors and officers of the forces that they shall raise in this association as they with Lord Byron's approbation shall recommend. He likewise assures them that those governors and officers shall not be removed, or any of the forces drawn away, by any authority but the King's and by the consent of those to whom he writes. Encloses a letter which in the Sheriff's absence was diverted to the writer. Believes the contents thereof to be true because they are confirmed by another of the same purport written by Sir Richard Byron. If all the other counties were not as backward - as can be seen by Sir Richard Byron's hereinclosed - 'I wold saye oures were nothinge forward'. Of all the 200 foot and 40 horse agreed upon, there are at the rendezvous at Croys yn Irios scarce 40 men, and all these naked unless it be 20 firemen sent by Sir William Williams from about Caernarvon. The fault clearly is that there were no captains appointed by the Commissioners, nor was it fit and just that any other should name them. Volunteers from Sir William Thomas and the writer marched over the Ferry - if none be returned back - 100 men and no more. These, by the direction here inclosed, will be at Ruthland this night. It may be well, the foot being so inconsiderable and so hardly got together, that they were not fit for Owen to covet command of. But if Owen had been pleased to take command of the horse, the writer believes it would have been possible, with the addition of volunteers, to make a body of 80 horse or more, if they in the upper part of the county would make some considerable advance. 'But without your knowledge and consent I durst attempt nothinge'. Conceives Owen has heard what Anglesey has promised, to wit 40 horse besides volunteers. Does not doubt of their performance, but fears they will not do it 'time enough'. Is bold freely to let Owen know what he fears will be the produce of this backwardness 'of oures'. In punishment thereof, some of these regiments coming down so late in the year, it will be turned to winter to the utter ruin of these parts. The writer wishes heartily that herein he may be mistaken. Has received 40 pounds of powder from Hooke and has given his note for the same. 'I praye you to beleve that, former unkindnesses notwithstandinge, in any service which you shall advance for the Kinge and countrey, I shall be readye to expresse myselfe from time to time clearelye and seriouslye'. Doubts not that Owen will use all possible diligence for the victualling of his garrison. For the better doing whereof Owen must not suffer any provisions to remain in Gloddaeth as much to prevent the enemy as to furnish himself. The writer cannot possibly spare Major Sydenham's men, and therefore Owen must be pleased to make shift with those he has when he has once settled things there. Thinks Owen may do the King much better service by going into the country to raise what forces he can to join with the writer's, and to leave the garrison in the charge of the Lieutenant-Governor. He will send Owen some powder as soon as possible, but match cannot be spared till the country bring in materials to make more. This day an express came from Raglan, who assures the writer that Laughern is totally routed in South Wales by the King's forces there, and is driven into Cardiff Castle where he is now besieged. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 609. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Lord Byron, at Carnarvon, to Sir John Owen, Governor of Conwy. A letter received that morning about the condition of Ruthin Castle stops his journey to Conwy. He sent orders to Colonel Vane to march back out of Merionethshire with all the speed he can. The foot must then be divided between the two garrisons of Conwy and Caernarvon. Because Owen has part of Little's men already, Byron will send the rest to him, and likewise some horse. Meantime all possible means must be used to bring in provisions as well for horse as foot wherein the writer desires Owen to consult with Archbishop Williams. They of Anglesey have not yet paid anything nor intend so to do for ought the writer hears. He thinks it will be needless to hand Owen any more men till he be better provided with victuals, unless Owen hears of the enemy's approach, who, as the writer is informed, are likely to engage before Ruthin before they attempt anything upon those parts. They are very good men and carried themselves with great fidelity and courage during that siege; and, being Welshmen, the writer thought them fitter for Owen's turn than any other. His Lordship of York has promised much concerning the victualling of Conwy, but Byron is sorry to hear that he has done no more yet. The writer formerly spoke to Owen concerning the transfer of the provisions at Gwydir House to Conwy; at Gwydir they will be but an invitation for Mitton to come there. Concerning Llanrwst Bridge, he thinks that breaking it down might at least retard, if not altogether hinder, the enemy coming over if they bring cannon along with them. He has provided some victuals for them both from the mountains and from Anglesey. The former, he hopes, will be with Owen sometime tomorrow. The other is stayed from coming because of the peevishness of the great men of the island, and that after he had provided a boat for it. He hopes that he will be able to release it; and that he will be with Owen very soon when he has finished a little business about the house wherein he is detained by reason of the jealousy those people at Bangor have put him, Sir William Williams, and all the country into. At her earnest entreaty Byron further supports her request that some bed, lent by her to the Archbishop of York and marked by her mark, seized for his defection, may be delivered to her. The King having resolved to comply with the desires of Parliament in everything which would be for the good of his subjects ... and to evidence the reality of his intentions of settling a happy and firm peace, requires them upon firm conditions to quit the towns, etc., entrusted to them and to disband all forces under their several commands. On the dorse is a copy of the King's message addressed: To the Speaker of the House of Peers pro tempore to be communicated to the Lords and Commons and to the Commissioners of the Parliament of Scotland. The King looking with grief of heart upon the sad suffering of his people in his three kingdoms, etc. ... asks that provisions of peace be speedily sent to him ... that he be allowed to return to London in safety ... that Parliament disband the forces in their power ... and expresses his willingness to disband all the forces subject to him as the above order will evidence. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 622. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 641. vtls005594568 ISYSARCHB54	File - The Marquis of Ormonde, at Carrick, to Colonel Michael Jones, Governor of Dublin (Copy),	1648/9, 9th March.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The writer has not forbore to invite Colonel Jones and those under his command to submit to the King's authority and to join with him in the royal service because of any aversion he has for them, or any disesteem of their power to advance or impede the same, but because he feared that while those who have of late usurped power over the subjects of England showed the least colourable shadow of moderation in their intentions towards the settlement of church and state ... any address from the writer would have been coldly received. ... If the Colonel, who certainly has not wanted foresight of the confusion now covering the face of England, had declared with the writer as Lord Inchequin and the Protestant army in Munster had done, then the writer fears that it would have been as difficult for the Colonel to have carried with him the main body of the army under his command - not so clear-sighted as himself - as it would have been dangerous to him and others inclined to have attempted it without them. But now that the mask of hypocrisy by which the independent army has ensnared and enslaved all estates and degrees of men has been laid aside - now that they appear to be the subverters of true religion and the protectors and inventors not only of false ones but even of irreligion and atheism - now that they have barbarously and inhumanly laid violent and sacrilegious hands upon and murdered God's anointed and their King, not as hitherto some parricides have done to make room for some usurper, but manifesting their intention to change the monarchy of England into anarchy, unless their aim be to consecrate an elective kingdom - and Cromwell such ... and to establish a perfect Turkish tyranny - now that of the three estates of King, Lords and Commons, wherein in all ages Parliaments have consisted, there remains too small a number and they the dregs and scum of the House of Commons picked by the army, a wicked remnant - and now that there remains no liberty but to profess blasphemous opinions ... and to oppress and undo those who are not like-minded with them - now the writer says he cannot but doubt that the Colonel and all with him will declare and act against so monstrous and unparalleled rebellion, faithfully acknowledging King Charles II ... under whom by God's blessing they may restore the Protestant religion to purity, Parliament to freedom, laws to their force and their fellow subjects to their just liberties ... Though there are not many motives relating to particular interests to be mentioned after those most weighty considerations, yet he assures the Colonel that there is nothing the latter cannot reasonably propose for his personal safety, etc., and of those who may adhere to him. If this overture happen to find place with him, asks for a speedy answer, if possible by the bearer. Dorset: Copy of part of Michael Jones's answer in the same hand as the above: He received his Lordship's letter of the 9th on the 12th instant inviting him to a conjunction with himself. The writer supposes that as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Ormonde has with others united with the Irish. He does not understand how his Lordship can be invested with that pretended honour; he is also 'well assured that it is not in the power of any to give pardon to those bloody rebels without the Parliament of England, as by the Act to that end passed may more fully appear. Parliament indeed would never assent to such a peace as that made by his Lordship with the rebels, wherein there is no provision made either for Protestants or the Protestant religion; nor can he see how the Protestant religion can be settled and restored to its purity by an army of Papists, or the Protestant interest maintained by those very enemies by whom they have been spoiled and theirs slaughtered ... As for the consideration offered by his Lordship relating to the present and late proceedings in England, the writer cannot see how those can be a sufficient motive for him - or for any other in like trust for the Parliament of England - to join with those rebels. That would be a manifest betrayal of the trust reposed in the writer - to desert the service committed to him by joining with those he should oppose, and opposing those whom he is obliged to serve. Nor does he conceive it to be part of his work or care to take notice of proceedings of state. It is certain - and former ages have approved it - that inter-meddling of governors and parties in England have betrayed the kingdom to the Irish, whereby British forces in Ireland were called off and the places therein laid open and given to the common enemy. That is what his Lordship might have observed in the former treaty with the rebels; when his Lordship withdrew into England the most considerable part of the English army then commanded by him, the remaining British party was not long after overpowered and the quarters were over-run by the Irish to the gates of Dublin, and Ormonde himself was reduced to that low condition of being besieged in that city - the metropolis and principal city of the kingdom,

	and by those very rebels who could not until then stand before him. It is very apparent that the dangers of hazarding the English interest in Ireland by sending any parties hence into any other kingdom are at present more than in former days. Yet concessions have been made to the rebels allowing them continued possession of the cities and places of strength whereof they stood possessed at the time of the treaty; and they are to have standing forces of 15,000 foot and 2,500 horse, and these as well as the whole kingdom to be regulated by Irish trustees chosen by the rebels themselves or by persons confided in by the rebels, without whom nothing is to be acted. He cannot therefore but remind his Lordship of the sense of what he himself once delivered on this particular matter - viz that the English interest in Ireland must be preserved by the English and not by the Irish, and upon that ground - if the writer be not deceived - his Lordship did then capitulate to Parliament, from which clear principle the writer is sorry to see his Lordship now receding. As to the threatened menace of blood and force if they dissent from his Lordship's ways and designs, the writer would much rather (the remainder of the letter is missing). Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 641. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Honourable Sir. It has pleased God and this Honourable House the supreme authority of this kingdom - to bestow that upon the writer, by their mercy, that which justice had justly taken from him, and in his own self he is like one risen from the dead by that hand which he will for ever honour. He is therefore bold to present unto his preservers - 'by yourself' - his humblest acknowledgments of an undeserved and unexpected favour, yea a favour of the highest nature, yea such as to make the writer feel himself to be like one in a golden dream. 'Oh, that I might begg and gayne your prayers ... that what you have given mee may bee improved to his Glory, who is the Father of all mercyes.' The writer's eyes are opened to see more clearly his former undertakings, but to make large promises in this, his sudden, change would be suspicious; yet he would fain say with confidence that he will never hold up a hand against 'your interest'. The writer missed him narrowly at Llangollen where he hoped to have kissed Lady Owen. He has not disposed of those lands in Caernarvonshire, which descended to the writer from William Lloyd, until he knows Owen's resolution for the Penmorfa tenement, and the writer's cousin William Vaughan's for the rest. The whole purchase is short of £100. Has had proffers, but reserves his final determination to part with them until he has had their two resolutions. But his occasions are now very pressing for money, and he must be forced to make money of them within three weeks or a month at furthest to pay according to some engagement of his elsewhere. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 644. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1649, 16th September.

Colonel Twistleton told Meyrick when he last saw him that the state had so disposed the £1,200 that it was too late to think of any deduction upon any pretence whatsoever, for the persons to whom it is assigned have discharged the state for so much money long ago. Demand for discharge before the end of the month. 'Consideringe what Colonel Twistleton playnly told you att Denbigh and you accordingly promised, it is in vayne to flatter yourselves in this busines'. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: When the writer last saw Annwyl at Conwy the latter promised to send the remaining £140 to Kimmel. Imagines that his own journey to London and his often being from home prevented the making good of that engagement. So he sends his servant purposely for it with the bond which he will deliver up upon payment of the money, although more might justly be demanded for the long forbearance. Begs for the money. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Owen undertook to move the writer's sister, Penelope Owen, and his cousin Vaughan about some moneys due to him, and promised to send an answer forthwith, but he forgot to acquaint Owen where letters were to be directed. Entreats him to direct them to Thomas Jones, the girdler, where he will call for them. In these calamitous times his children and he suffer wonderfully. Money would be welcome and free them from great misery. PS It is an old maxim Frustra fit per plura quod fieri potest per pauciora. Beseeches Owen to take it into consideration. Owen's sisters keep all from the writer there, and his wife and her feoffees keep all from him here. His houses stand all unlet and unset, so that Owen can judge what a sad condition they are in. Mackworth concerning Sir Robert Eyton, 1652/3, 12th March. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: These letters certify whom it may concern that Sir Robert Eyton of Pentre Maddock, Shropshire, having been sequestered for subscribing only one warrant as a commissioner of array, acted no further in the late King's service nor adhered to his party: indeed he subscribed through the threats of other commissioners maliciously bent on ruining him if he refused to subscribe to the warrant. Soon after the fall of Shrewsbury, Eyton expressed his good affection for Parliament and tendered his services for the gaining of the Isle of Anglesey and the Castle of Beaumaris by treaty with the then Lord Bulkeley in whom as a kinsman he had very good interest and who then had the command of the said castle and island. He was employed in that service which he performed effectually and faithfully, so that upon the agreement made between Eyton and Bulkeley the castle and island were delivered to the agents of Parliament, who, in consequence, discharged him of his delinquency. He has also shown an impeccable zeal for the present government ever since, which has rendered him very hateful to the disaffected party and exposed him to danger amongst his neighbours. He was a justice of the peace before the war and is a man fitted for public employment. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 664. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

vtls005594597 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Owen's letter on behalf of three gentlemen of 'our county' has reached the writer. He wishes he knew how he might be of service to them in the matter, so that he might give Owen and the gentlemen concerned some testimony of the reality of those wishes. There are some friends who labour to take off the restraint from two of them, asserting it to have been occasioned by some mistake. It seems that this act of state, 'of this large extent', is grounded upon a design of the common enemy to disturb the public peace, and that this course may be a probable means to prevent it, and that although many now in restraint may be free from being personally engaged in any such design, yet their firm adherence to that interest keeps some life in it, and gives encouragement to attempt the involving of the nation in blood, knowing how apt men are naturally to improve opportunities for the advancing of their particular interests, fax extincta recens trahit eminus ignem, and that may give just cause of suspicion to those in authority to justify - when common safety is concerned - so general a restraint. This is but the guess of a private man who desires not to inquire into affairs of state. However until something be held forth towards those persons in general the writer does not see how any application can rationally be made for any particular person that is under the common prejudice. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 669. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

About eight years ago Sir John and Mr William Owen were outlawed at Holden's suit upon a bond of £400 for the payment of £200. Two years since, when Mr Owen Wynne was sheriff, an outlawry was delivered to the deputy-sheriff by an agent of Holden's. By inquisition it was found that Sir John was seised of lands to the value of £100 to £200. Since which time Ellis Hughes, the under-sheriff, was prevailed upon not to file the inquisition until last Hilary term. Meantime William Owen preferred a bill in Chancery against Holden, and doing little good thereupon Holden has now transmitted the outlawry and inquisition to the Exchequer and has got a levari facias directed to the Sheriff of Caernarvon to levy all the cattle on the ground before found. Owen's counsel has advised him not to stir in it until the beginning of next term. All their opponents will do now should be easily overthrown. Thinks that if the sheriff were not 'our' friend the cattle should be put out of the way for a time. Holden's agents have another bond of the penalty of £1000 for the payment of £500 which they intend to put in suit against Sir John at the next Caernarvonshire Sessions. All the witnesses to the bond are dead and they will never be able to prove it. 'In the interim make under-sheeriffe your friend and you shall not need feare any disturbance of your or your tenants' cattle'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 672. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 673. vtls005594601 ISYSARCHB54	File - Rice Vaughan, at Gray's Inn, to Sir John Owen at Mr Harvey's house in Chester, 1655, 11th August. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The little gentleman at Chancery Lane end and the writer yesterday renewed their address to Lord Strickland upon the letter and petition formerly delivered him touching Owen's enlargement - having indeed before heard of some inclination in the Protector to relieve some persons in restraint. They found Lord Strickland very civil, and he told them that he had already moved the Lord Protector on Owen's behalf and found him propense to favour him. But Lord Strickland had not received his positive answer as yet but would suddenly do it. He told them to stay at the Council door, 'my Lord being then within and asleep', till he came out, and after a little stay he brought them his Lordship's answer that Owen was to be discharged. Accordingly he went with them to Mr Malyn, his Lordship's secretary, and gave him Owen's petition and directed him to draw up a letter to Colonel Croxon, which his Lordship would sign, that Owen might be forth-with discharged and that without any other terms than upon parole and that Owen should live peaceably and be forthcoming if there were cause. His Lordship's letter cannot be signed before Monday because he goes out of town today and returns then. 'You may please not to forget my Lord Strickland's civilities, which I and your little gentleman were eye witnesses of. If you please to write him a letter of thanks, I think it may not be disadvantageous to you. Ingratum si dixeris omnia dixeris.' Owen's discharge, God willing, will be sent him by the next post with care. 'The little gentleman says you may send for your horses and hawks by that time your discharge comes to you and he says your partridges will be afraid of your release. Sir, there is some expectation of the release of many others suddenly but whether of all or not we cannot tell'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 673. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

But these lands, he perceives, are not in question: the only thing in question is the mountains concerning which Owen makes a query - whether that being open at the time of the bill exhibited and not three years enclosed, Owen may not interrupt the complainants' tenants from enclosing? The writer thinks he may, for the injunction does not extend to give any other possession than they had at the time the bill was exhibited and three years before, which possession of theirs was not in severalty at either of those times . Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 680. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

It is very well known that until Owen lately came home none of the country appeared so violent before they were stirred up by his threats and private encouragements. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 682. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Mainly legal business. Has received a letter from his correspondent spiced with many ingredients of passion, but hopes that before the receipt of this letter the cause will have been removed. What belongs to Mr Parry and Mr Lloyd, they will answer for themselves. If he is not satisfied with their letters, the writer will pursue further directions. The business of Thomas Smallman. An appearance has been entered for Richard Williams, of which an account will be sent by Mr Parry. His directions with regard to the cloth were observed, for it was bought of the friend mentioned in his letter. But understanding him to be a Salopian, the writer thought it more expedient to presume upon Mrs Kent's patience to examine the bargain - for her skill was better than the writer's experience. Holden reports that he has extended your lands but - I doubt - Sir John's; therefore have a care - according to the former caution - lest he should doe any thinge to your person'. Sir John's money is out at grass and brings in milk; he may conceal it to Sir John and he shall have a syllabub. Security to Mr Rees Vaughan and the writer are Mr Edward Lloyd of the Outlawrys, Mr Thomas Lloyd and Mr Jerrard Lloyd, the merchant. The writer would have his correspondent's addresses to Judge Nicholas tenderly used: he should only

Colonel Mark Trevor tells the writer that he has a goshawk which he intends to present to Sir John in discharge of his former promise and testimony of love. The writer did not see 'her' for he conceives that 'she' is at the house of Colonel Hill. But Trevor assured the writer that 'she' would be ready within fourteen days. Humbly requests Sir John to let the writer know how he would have 'her' conveyed to him. If a messenger is sent over Sir John shall have a cast or two of 'merlions' from Trevor by the same hand. Had 'she' now been ready 'she' could have been sent by Richard Wynn of Beaumaris 'who passed this weeke from us over in John Smythe's shipp who brought over to us slates for buildinge, but that opportunity lost I well know not how to sende her you but as you shall please to directe'. Captain Kinaston has newly gone for England with hawks, so the writer understands not now of any other messenger. They have heard there to their no little grief of the extremity of Sir John's sickness, but to their hearty rejoicing of his safe and good delivery. When Sir John writes the speediest way is by post to Holyhead, so to Dublin, thence to Newry to post-master Butterfeild who will safely convey the letters to Green Castle where the writer resides. PS The writer's cousin Dic Price presents his humble service. 	Has received a letter which signifies that it came from 'you' although it has no name. Reports on a variety of legal and financial matters. The writer asks that he be looked upon as a person who not only actuates with all vigilancy, but who is summoned to great charges and disbursements exceeding the interest of his correspondent's moneys. Touching the £90 transmitted to France, the writer has taken order for repayment of it. He was never acquainted that it was his correspondent's intention that the money should be for the use of Mr Waring. I pray entreat Mr Waring to find some other way ... You shall receive a box with 11/2 lbs of tobacco for yourself and a watch for Mr Tannett the mending whereof cost me 10/-. Wishes Mr Rice Tannet to be reminded of £4 which the writer lent his son, John, and £3 which Ned Jones of the Seal did furnish him with but 'pray let not your nephew John know hereof'. (William Owen), Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: He knows nothing to the contrary of Major Lloyd's good will towards him, but he hopes that Owen will renew his remembrances to the Major. He is still in the Governor's company, and has the right hand file of pikes. A Major Hinton, a Shropshire man, is the writer's very good friend, and is in great esteem with the Governor. If Owen knows him or any of his friends about court, and would write a few lines to him, it would advantage the writer very much. PS Colonel Whittle told the writer that if Sir Thomas Clergee's request was not effective, he would endeavour to get the Duke of York's countenance. His heart bleeds to see such fellows in command. There is not one in commission from the highest to the lowest who, if they had their desert, should not be made patterns of the saddest misery and punishment ever imposed on the son of man. He speaks not out of envy, but by the mouths of those who have heard their rebellious language against the King on the day of his proclamation. They wished to God that they had never seen the day, yet these fellows have since had their commissions renewed by the King. PPS Although he is duty free, his pay is no more than a sentinel, which is but 3/- a week. If he cannot get a commission in a month or six weeks he intends to return to England. he would prefer to remain in Dankirk with Owen's assistance and that of Col. Whittle. There is a vacancy in the Governor's regiment of foot, and Capt. Menes' company in that regiment is destitute of an ensign. Encloses several legal papers together with the order of the Committee of Sequestration and a threatening letter from Colonels Carter and Twistleton to her husband by which they compelled him to pay the £1,200 due to her sister-in-law. Asks him to confer with cousin Meyrick who was an eye and ear witness to that business. After having bound her husband to them for the £1,200, they pretended that Parliament had assigned that sum to them for their arrears. The enclosed letter from the Lord President reached the writer by the last post, enclosed in one of Sir Richard Lloyd's. Though it tells all it imports, the writer cannot yet tell 'what recommendation of me' in relation to some forces to be commanded by Owen. The whole business is new to him and he has understood very little of it before this morning. The intimation also being short and imperfect he is in the dark. He is resolved, however, that if Owen takes upon himself an employment, he will decline nothing under him which Owen may advise. Asks for instructions by cousin Elis Edwards. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 696. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

All he can now do is to leave these few lines with the copy of the agreement enclosed in the hands of Sir John's son, to be conveyed to him. Is also a suitor on behalf of his good friend and kinsman, Mr Richard Lloyd of Carrog, as a person fit to have a command in the Merionethshire militia. It is high time for him to look towards London. If he seconds the humour of privacy too much, he will deny the public the use of his great parts. If he thinks the writer has his own ends in the invitation, it is no untruth at all, for he really wants Owen, and will eternally do so. If Owen indulges in retreat, possibly London is out of favour with him. The writer confesses that it is a monstrous choice they have made for the Parliament, and Southwark is

	likely to follow that copy. But it was done by the mean 'livery' who outvoted the abler and graver sort. The offence against bishops was the pretence, and down they must if all sectary can overpower them and the priests. It is the monarchy that is thus undermined though not battered immediately, for if prelacy confirm not the es(tablis)hed government, Presbyterianism will set up for itself (torn) ... incompetent with the crown. Even moderate men do not altogether justify the bishops - he means some of them - nor then 'you' do some deans. The writer hopes, however, that their enemies will reduce them to better observation and prepare the world to oppose their designs. The genius of the House is not so early to be guessed at, but it is to be feared. Persuaded by friends, the writer 'gave his name in for a member', but he has outlived all his old friends, and young men have new thoughts. It is likely to be an uneasy work and to require strict attendance, which his age is unfit for. Owen knows than he is naturally lazy, and likes not to be put out of his pace, though he meant to have strained himself the more now that it might be the last public work of his life. And the winter hitherto has neither been hopeful for the increase of the country nor the health of the town which is too numerous to be provided for in time of dearth and too great for ordering of health in time of mortality, especially with the coronation and Parliament so close the one upon the other. Foreign ambassadors contribute in high honour to the King if they did not countenance their priesthood too much. Asks Owen to tell the Reverend Bishop that he honours him as much as any, and despairs not to see him in his full rights, and he would have been even more confident of it if all men had been of the Bishop's moderation. He wrote his Lordship by Mr Johnes, but knows not the success of his letter. The ordinary weekly news outgoes his advices. The Lent sermons have been orderly and devoutly performed, the Church recovers something more of Common Prayer, but there are desperate Presbyterians who will never desert from their canting until rigour and discipline enforce it; the guards are settled well, but the oaths have offended the Catholics who are more loyal certainly than the sectary. The old club which Sir Rich. Grosvenor, the Doctor and Mr Mostyn, [?] in memory of Owen and Sir John, the writer's worthy friend, keeps up 'though we swagger some tyme for wyne' to his Lordship. The Presbyterian is now upon the stage alone - their priests are discharged of the pulpit, though they endeavoured much to be indulged, as notoriously pleased to hear themselves preach and pray there; but as they misguided the world formerly,

	so by other men in their places the world will in time be disabused. The King and the Duke of York are to have the honour of purging the Church of this generation, and the chief instrument was the Bishop of London; now the great work is how to quiet their proselytes. Many of the soldiery's officers are found here contrary to the proclamation and are imprisoned; divers have affronted the Book of Common Prayer seditiously, and suffer. Yesterday was said to have been designed for their choice of a general, but all their plots were discovered and prevented, for the guards have not rested in bed these ten nights. Commission for arms in the City sits often. New commissions have been granted to the Earls of Cleveland and Northampton for raising volunteer horse. So all diligence is used by the King who is here in his royal person. But Owen will inquire of Cavaliers how they are looked upon: certainly if they serve well in their stations, they will find their merit; for if the King vindicate upon the insolency of the Presbyterian, he must do it by the Cavalier. If Owen would know the government of their moneys, it had much ado to escape Sir Evan Floyd's design to put it into notorious Presbyterian hands as treasurers, which makes the writer wonder at the constitution of man-kind: as if 'we' had not suffered sufficiently already by their powers, for if they reduce 'us againe they will not spare us.' Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 706. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 707. vtls005594635 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Wandesforde to Col. William Owen,	1662, 9th September.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: If Owen confines himself to a little garden he is happy, for it answers what he expects from it. But the writer confesses that this immense mass of men yields him nothing. He had hardly one friend of free converse. The sea has long deprived him of one and Wales of some others; indisposition near to death denies him the Doctor, so amongst a multitude he is in a desert, and his business is as much shattered as when he came home ... He may think of some retreat to a fitter place of repose for his age, and leave both his great friends and powerful enemies to divide his concerns amongst them, for if it be good in diet to leave with an appetite, is it not enough to do the like with the world and not to breathe the last gasp in the pursuit of it. It is a comfort that he has been instrumental in making peace in his family. The accomplishment of it rests in the Primate of Ireland, but as Owen knows him well to be of large parts, so his Grace cannot be wanting to do right in this ... He merits infinitely of the Irish Church. The writer hears that it never was in a more hopeful way of establishment. The news book will give Owen a better account of a late act concerning 'our' church than the writer can. But the writer because he would rectify Owen's opinion to some of the Church, though he cannot hope to do so to all, the recipient will find it truly related in the book that the Bishop of London alone opposed the petition of the Presbyterian churchmen for indulgency ... and though there were those who befriended the adverse opinion, yet the Duke of York and the King graciously confirmed the act and so quieted the pulpits but not the people, for many officers of the disbanded soldiery are taken ... many insolencies have been done against the Book of Common Prayer ... troops have been seen in the country by night ... letters have been found concerning their meetings and designs to choose a general ... and the King has been so watchful that the guards have not slept by night for ten nights. It is said that the Earls of Cleveland and Northampton are to have commissions for horse ... Yesterday Sir William Compton was agreed upon for Treasurer for the money for the loyal soldiery, and a few days since there was much ado to divert a design pressed by Sir Evan Ffloyd lest those moneys should have been lodged in the hands of such Presbyterians as upon inquiry the exchange wondered at the wisdom of Parliament that they could find no Protestants to entrust it withal ... The neighbour commended to the writer's acquaintance by Owen in the choice of persons to purge the suspected returns in favour of officers, pressed earnestly for Dr. Edwards to be commission, and such of the soldiery were named as were likely to disfavour false pretenders as persons of honour and integrity ... God blesses with peace abroad however he deals with them at home. The town cries loud for want of trade and many of the profuseness of the Court. If the Court were more moderate the town would complain more. It is true that the times give no lustre to the one nor the present governors to the other. This city is in a sad case to what it was in 'our' time. The writer speaks of those to let Owen see what

	value he sets on Owen's life. Many live a country life that are great strangers to the comfort of it (which) rests in the contents of it. Yet he is obliged to send a single answer since the other plaintiff has lately gone to Ireland upon urgent business, and his return this winter is very uncertain. For his own part, finding Owen so well inclined to an amicable conclusion of those differences, he is ready to close with him - but on conditions. Lord Bulkeley and his brother, Mr Thomas Bulkeley, had left Caernarvon before Owen's letter reached that place, the first for Anglesey and 'my cousin of Dinas' for Gwydir. Owen's letter was dispatched forthwith to Sir Richard Wynne to be communicated to the deputy lieutenants of those parts, and the writer did further give assurance of his readiness to attend Owen to any place 'they' should upon consultation resolve upon to expedite His Majesty's service. The writer has ever since daily expected a summons from Owen or them, which without doubt will be very sudden. Howsoever the writer, God willing, will attend Owen at Pwllheli by nine on Monday morning, and bring along with him Captain Griffith. If in the meantime anything of moment comes to the writer's knowledge he will hasten to let Owen know of it. He will cheerfully give obedience to what further commands Owen shall be pleased to lay upon him. All here present their respects to Lady Owen and Sir John. 'Your obliged cousin to love and serve you.' Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 721. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 722. vtls005594650 ISYSARCHB54	File - William Griffith of Llyn, at Pwllheli, to Sir John Owen at Clennau,	1663, 12th October. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Is sorry that the weather together with the abundance of rain should be so excessive as to deprive him of kissing Owen's hands at Pwllheli. When the waters are laid and the weather more calm he will wait upon Owen at the place and time appointed. They may reasonably expect a summons from the deputy-lieutenants of the other end of the county to meet to consider several matters relating to the King's service. If any such come to Owen, asks for his commands by the bearer or some other. Sends by the bearer a merlin, as he supposes it to be, which if it be otherwise Owen will have to excuse an ignorant falconer. It came from Ireland with a single bell, and was taken to Aberdaron and kept there a fortnight with a worse falconer than the writer, where his train was broken and bruised. He hopes it will prove well. Services to Lady Owen and to his cousin William Owen who, as he is informed by the bearer, is with Owen. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 722. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Sends with the bearer the enclosed printed news. Understands that since all the other commotes are raising their subsidies - that is the two latter payments - Owen has ordered the re-collecting of what falls on Eifionydd, which is to be paid at Caernarvon on the 12th at the house of Robert Meredith into the hands of John Owen, the drover, or to his order there. In the raising of the two latter subsidies the writer recommends to Owen's consideration one Robert Evans who lately has lost his wife, which has left six children motherless. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: If he could have come to Clennau he would have saved Owen the trouble of any journey, but if Owen knew how restless his occasions have made him, and what little time they allowed for such a visit, which respect required from the writer, Owen would be very willing to excuse him. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: In obedience to Owen's commands the writer has caused an (?)embargo to be made not only within Caernarvonshire but also within the whole of Anglesey where he has been in person though he had much ado to draw one about, and to his charges of a French crown. There are four vessels at Beaumaris, one at Cadnant, none at Bangor, one at Caernarvon. What is at Pwllheli, Conwy and Holyhead, time will discover. PS He hears that Mr Hill, Mr Robert Wynne and Mr Carecke have made bond with some of the timber lately found in Llyn. If all are sub-vice-admirals the writer is done with it, for he finds no purpose in spending his money, and others to receive the profit. He is willing to resign his commission.

Encloses it so that Owen may partake also of the news which the Court then afforded, as indeed it is never without some news or other. But lying and dissimulation were never any novelty there. For the six counties of Wales 'we' are flatly answered. The other part of their desire has been put off with a wilful mistake, a feigned excuse to usher a denial. If the Bishop of London had mistaken the county and said Gloucester for Salop, Sir Phil. might have rectified it out of the note which the writer sent him to be delivered to the Lord Treasurer. There, he is sure, there was no such mistake or error. He is re-opening the matter through Mr Ravenscroft with the Bishop of London. In the interim the writer is satisfied that nothing has been lost by the failure of the design. But he does resent that his desire and endeavour to serve Owen or his friend is so unsuccessful. He will not desist, but will gladly embrace every occasion to manifest himself as an affectionate and faithful friend and cousin. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 742. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The writings must be ready by the next sessions. Spoke at the last sessions with his cousin, Robert Wynne, who is now willing 'to doe it'. He also spoke with the Baron of the Exchequer to pass the fine, who demanded £50, and the writer's cousin Wynne offered him £20. Clenennau letters and papers 747.	File - William Humffreys to Col William Owen, esq., at Porkington, 1668, 17th November.

vtls005594677 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Legal business. On the advice of Mr Vaughan's counsels the writer yesterday repaired to Mr John Thelwall and found him very courteous. But at the moment Thelwall has been directed by the Lord Keeper to treat with Esq. Roberts about their interests in the judgment obtained in Thelwall's name against Mr Vaughan. Has only this day waited upon Mr Ellis about Owen's queries. Has arranged a meeting between Ellis and others of Mr Vaughan's counsel. Counsel's opinion signed by William Ellis on 17th Nov. appears on the dorse: Sir Francis Russell obtained a decree in chancery in 1649 against John Bodvel, esq., for £500 per annum for the maintenance of his wife, Anne, and her two children. Bodvel resisted and his estates in Caernarvon and Anglesey were sequestrated. In 1656, Mr Vaughan, being then sheriff of Caernarvonshire, by authority of the court, ejected the Lady Elizabeth Bodvel, John's mother, from Bodvel's house, she being in possession of part thereof as her dower, and having goods in the house and cattle upon the land. She was living apart from her husband, Mr Thelwall, and had separate maintenance. Thelwall and his wife then brought an action for battery against Vaughan and the sequestrators in the Common Pleas, and secured £450 damages, and in a further action £1,000 damages for the goods and cattle. The sheriff and sequestrators then exhibited a bill in equity claiming that they acted only in obedience to the order of the court. But the damages are now being disputed between Mr Roberts, administrator for Lady Bodvel, and Mr Thelwall who claims the benefit of the judgment, and suits of equity are proceeding between them for the same. The question is with whom it is most safe for Mr Vaughan to agree while these suits are pending - with Mr Roberts or with Mr Thelwall? And if he agrees with either of them, what security is fit to be taken against the other? Counsel's opinion is that Thelwall has the best title at law, but that Roberts has the better title in equity, and that it is better to agree with Roberts. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 747. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Concerning the inheritance of Ryton, it will not be parted - if one man may believe another - for a reason which he must not commit to writing. But he has entreated Mr Mason to know his Lordship's will ... Concerning leases made by Owen to Lord Craven ... The writer has told Mr Evan Vaughan that Owen is likely to part with Ryton on good terms, which pleased him. Desiring to know who was Vaughan's 'chapman', he was told that it was Mr Eddaws, the Lord Keeper's man, and that 'it was for my Lord Keeper's sonne'. Mr William Griffith has also written desiring the same of Vaughan. The latter desires Owen to have his proposals ready when Vaughan comes down that he may acquaint them with his demands. The writer hopes, however, that Owen's occasions for money will not make him part with it on such easy terms as they expect. The writer must whisper in Owen's ear that Mr Vaughan said that Owen's uncle left him charged with a debt as well as an estate ... so in fine their aim is to work upon Owen's necessities ... The writer does not despair that the inheritance may be parted withal if his Lordship - who is very ancient - should happen to die ... As for Hitchin Mills, Mr Anwyl cannot yet give an account of the particular interest Owen has there, but he 'sayes hee is out' some money for Owen's uncle as concerning them Anwyl thinks the best way is to sell them, and he has employed an attorney to look out for a 'chapman'. The writer hopes that by this time Owen knows, without offence to Mr Anwyl, what confidence is to be put under the robe of a lawyer or an attorney. Next week Owen will receive a box in which there is a side-saddle and furniture for the writer's cousin, Ellin, Owen's daughter, and a hat and hat case of the writer's. They are directed to Mr Evans, apothecary. Love and service to Owen and his Lady, Cousin Jane, honest Cousin Robin, and the rest. PS Will write about Lady Herbert's business later. Hopes to be with them at the latter end of Christmas. Mr Anwyl wonders why Owen does not prove his uncle's will. As to the transaction of amours between his impolished son and that completely accomplished lady, the writer will ever to the utmost of his capacity be not only inclinable to, but solicitous of, lessening his own interests to enlarge theirs, so far as it may consist with the future well-being of himself and his other son. That which at present seems not to be mutually complied with ... centres only in something mercenary, although it is evident from their obliging comportments in this affair that they would have himself and his son understand that their endearing intimations set a higher value upon virtue and affection than on any temporal possessions. One related so nearly to such sweet natures and to so honourable a family, he cannot but so incomparably prize 'that methinks I should out-president all former parents of my capacities for my sonn's happiness in this affair And therefore in order thereunto what may be done possibly, shall be done really by J.G.'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 760. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location:

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: He is heartily glad the waters have agreed so well with Sir William, and hopes that will lay a foundation for better health. Six weeks is long enough for the course. Three or four days before the end of that period, Sir William should abate his taking with a pint in the morning and should leave off at four pints, taking four purging pills in the evening before, and after three or four days, four more in the morning. But if he leaves the place soon after his course, he should defer this until he comes home, and afterwards purge once a month in the same manner. Clenennau letters and papers 762. vtls005594692 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Godolphin, at London, to John Ellis,	1673, 6th November.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: A reply to a letter of the 10th Oct. Sir William Godolphin at Madrid having resolved to part with his Auditor's place of Wales, the writer has lately written him for the pre-emption thereof, which he expects will cost him no less than 16 or 1700 pounds, Sir William having been formerly offered £2,000 for it. That is why the writer cannot be so positive in complying with Ellis's demands as he would wish. As to the demands, he has never consented to them. Notwithstanding, he may agree to them if at the next session of Parliament the dark cloud which at present seems to hang over them be dissipated so that a man may hopefully say that he is likely to have property in what he calls his own. The land shall be purchased at 17 years value, and the wood and timber - as much thereof as is fit for sale - may be sold and the proceeds thereof equally divided, and the rest bought by his son at a reasonable value. The chattels within and without doors to be treated in much the same manner as the wood and timber. The whole of Abertanat is to be settled on the young lady in the manner mentioned in Ellis's paper. All the writer's lands in Cornwall to be settled forthwith on his son, and surrendered forthwith into his possession; and the latter is to be considered as the writer's eldest son on the writer's decease. He also professes in all seriousness that such is the high esteem he has for that noble family and those incomparably obliging ladies, that nothing in his power will be withheld to complete his son's happiness under God in this affair: to expect more would but infelicitate J.G. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 762. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 764. vtls005594694 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Godolphin, at London, to Madam Mary Tanat, 1673, 12th December. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: There can be no lines from her but what his respects to her person command him to treat with all the civilities imaginable ... The lands in Cornwall are worth £300 per annum if his son looks after them as the writer has done, and they will be delivered into his possession at marriage if not sooner. For at his decease they descend to him in his mother's right, she being the sole heiress thereof. He would, moreover, be unnatural to his son, and injurious to his own memory, if at his own decease he did not consider him as the eldest representative of his person. As for Madam Tanat's demands, she says she will take £8,000 for the land - being her two-thirds of Abertanat for her dear sister's jointure; and as for the £2,000 in dispute, she will allow £1,000 thereof in lieu of the yearly rent charge of £120 per annum on the estate, and take his son's bond for the other £1,000 to be raised by the sale of the wood. She must pardon him if he cannot reconcile this, for he had supposed that if she accepted £8,000 for the land, all other sums would have been out of dispute. He defies the world in competitorship for respect towards her person and family, but he knows not how to comprise £10,000 in £8,000 ... But his son will get the Cornish lands and the place of Auditor of Wales within the next six months, so that he may be in a kind her neighbour even if he may not be in a nearer kind her dearer relation. When he offered £8,000 for the land he took it for granted that his son would have complied with him in what he expected of him in reference to himself and his other son during their lives. But since he declines to do so - probably for his present advantage - the writer inclines to desist from pressing him any further therein. Clenennau letters and papers 767. vtls005594697 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Godolphin, at Doctors' Commons, London, to his dear sister,	1674, 19th December.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Abject apologies for not having written to so near and dear a relation for about nine months ... He left the city at the beginning of May, and was not above ten days or a fortnight in it during all the summer which he spent at Astrop and Tunbridge in order to better his health. On the 7th July he altered his condition from a widowed to a married estate, which for some time gave him - as it does others - such a diversion as renders some incapacity for all affairs. Indeed he chose then to be silent to the recipient for some time that she might have the first intelligence thereof from other hands, and thence a fairer latitude for information whence to judge whether he had done well or ill in his choice. Since his return from Tunbridge he has been much busied about taking a new habitation and fitting the same for his accommodation. These are the reasons why he has not written to his dear sister: craves her charity, and promises to correspond punctually with her in future. He gathers from her letter of the 26th Oct. that she has moved to Penzance where he hopes she finds as much content and satisfaction as could be expected in any place in the west. His son John has not written because he too has been out of town all summer, and since in school, but when he returns at Christmas he will write her a few lines to thank her for her rich and excellent token ... His son Sid has been with him for ten days or a fortnight, but has now returned again to Shropshire where his wife is, and from whom he understands his sister has received a letter. Sid's wife is a very deserving person, very commendable in her comportment generally, of discretion much beyond her age, and one that is likely to prove a comfort to her husband. One of her other sisters has since married Sir John Carew's brother - a Turkey merchant ... The writer himself has also much cause to bless the Lord for guidance in his marriage choice for eternity cannot be too long to bless Him sufficiently for it. His sister, he knows, had so dear an affection for his 'last dear saint' as to wish that he would remain a widower ... but his present wife was well known to his 'last dear saint' ... and the latter often wished that she would become the wife of her own wealthy brother who then was and still is in the Canaries ... His present wife is well spoken of by everyone. God has certainly dealt with him very graciously in his younger years and now has remembered him in his older years. His wife is not above 33 years of age, and of so young an aspect as if she were not above 25 years of age. 'Yet her comportment is tempered with so much staydness and gravitie, mix'd with such a complacent cheerfulness without vanitie, and her disposition so suited with myne, as renders the great difference of our ages much the less discernable, at least the less condemnable, specially in as much as her sweet temper, is qualified with so much judgment, meekness and moderation, as renders it no easie matter for all the ffrowardness incident to old age or bodily infirmitie to discompose' ... Hopes they will write to one another .

The writer's linen is all old and much worn, and will scarcely serve his own family, having made no new house linen these twenty years. His son also knows that he has but little plate. He presumes that in such an ancient family as his wife's, there is no want of such things. But he has ordered a silver basin to be made and sent to his daughter-in-law next week, and also a sky-coloured satin mantle fairly laced for a baptising, as good as ever - indeed the same - as he himself used. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The writer has taken care - according to Owen's request when the writer was at Porkington - to mind the return of sheriffs for Shropshire, and now believes that Owen is out of danger there - though Mr Roger Evans, his neighbour, is not. But unexpectedly this evening going to wait on the Lord President in order to excuse a South Wales gentleman on the commands of a person of quality, the writer found Owen's name in front of the Denbighshire list - and so he promised some money to have Owen excused. He could not prevail to have his name put out, but he believes that it will be Mr Langford of Trefalun whose name will be pricked. He thinks that his landlord, Brereton, is concerned as third person: how it will fare with him he knows not, though the writer is obliged to do him all the slender services he can but he hopes it will be fixed on Langford without redemption as the middle man between them both. He thinks that if he had not by chance seen Owen's name, the latter would have been pricked, even if later excused. Owen's cousin, Griffith Vaughan, is the first man in the Merionethshire list, and as far as the writer can find has nobody to look after him. Mr William Salesbury wrote the writer a letter to offer £5 to excuse him if he were returned, but it seems it is a contemptible sum among the Lord President's favourites. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 773.

A former letter he sent to Owen has not been answered. Asks him again to let him know how his brother, etc., are, if any are alive. Would be glad to hear from any of his old acquaintances. She has been very weak ... but there are now good hopes of her recovery, and her ague is beginning to abate. He hopes his son and his wife and both the little ones are well. His papers for raising money are with Lord O'Brian who approved them, and intended to know the King's pleasure therein with the Lord Treasurer. This was eight days ago, but he has heard nothing since. If it takes, it will do well, otherwise they are as they were. Their cousin, Sidney Godolphin, went to Spain about six days ago by the King's order. War with France is now likely. Asks his son to make compliance punctually with Mr Weeks and Mr Walton. Expects his brother, Thomas Martyn, every day, but how to answer his expectation he knows not, by reason of those late unexpected great losses on his wife's estate, unless Providence make it up to him in some other way. If the papers in Lord O'Brian's hands take, all may be well, for the writer has taken care thereby for his son as well as himself. Whether	1677/8, 17th January.

She was much troubled when she had a letter from Mrs Twistleton. Not having heard anything since, she sent on purpose to know how she is, as well as the rest of the good company. She encloses bills for what she has returned for Sir Robert, and so much money as will make up £700. She desires an acquittance from Mrs Owen's hands for all that has been received by her; by next time the writer will produce notes of what she has received and from whom. There was a rumour in those parts that Sir Robert was like to pass himself off for £2,500 which she hopes is altogether untruth. She thinks it is better for his interests and Madam Jane's that he should be as he is than to adventure on so small a fortune, and when St Andrew's is past she hopes he will be in a condition to have more: the recipient will also receive another note complete of what has been raised on the tenements, but no more is to be expected for this year, for she has let all the tenements except Arddu Bach. She has demanded the rent charge of 1/10 due upon the house and tenement of Charles of Penmorfa. He says he will not pay them unless he be forced to it. PS She had almost forgotten to add that Mrs Jones of Caernarvon had bosses in their burying place of Llanbeblig for her maids and her brother's maid, which the writer caused to be removed. Mrs Jones also disowns any right the Owens have in the chancel of the town church, though the writer knows it to be otherwise. 	Acknowledges receipt of a letter. He waited on Owen's mother and sisters at Llanddyn yesterday, where they intend to stay this month. The commission between the recipient and Ned Evans is to be executed the last of this month at Llangollen, which he believes is the reason that Owen's mother stays so long in these parts. He thanks him for his news, which was to him very welcome, especially that part that confirms the recovery of the writer's brother, which he beseeches God to continue to him. The weather is very cold and great frosts have continued all this Christmas. There is a very great quarter at Wrexham this week, the papists being bound to appear to have the oaths tendered to them, which he hears they will refuse. There is a difference between Mr Sheriff and Sir Thomas Middleton, which is referred to Lord Cholmondeley and Sir John Wynne to be composed that day. Sir John kept a merry Christmas and many of Owen's friends stayed with him all the while; they are now all dispersed to their own homes. The great election in Montgomeryshire begins on Thursday. Gadbury to Sir Robert Owen, kt, at Clennau, 1679/80, 17th February. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: His heels being - by God's Providence - at liberty once again, the writer was ambitious to acquaint Owen therewith, and to send him a letter which he wrote in October and which has been in prison ever since - thanks to Sir William Waller - together with its poor author. The history of his sufferings is too large to give an account of in this little piece of paper; yet this he can say, that if he had been a villain by nature, his imprisonment administered temptations sufficient to have improved him. But he was bold enough to resist the devil, so that he fled from the writer. But he did err in yielding credit to some menaces which sounded very harsh and would not have done so either, but that he was betrayed thereunto by a pretended friend and that was the cause of an additional information and of the false report that he had recanted the first. Mr Clarke and the writer often drink to Owen's and Mr Lloyd's health. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 782. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

His Lordship of his own act has put Owen in the commission of the peace for Caernarvon and Merioneth. Sir John Trevor says that Owen's commission charge - i.e. bare fees - will come to something above £20. He hears that Owen's brother - the writer's cousin - has come to town, but has not yet seen him; the Captain went to meet Owen's brother at Aldergate St this evening at about 4 o'clock. He had a mind that they should lie together in the same lodging, and that Owen's brother should be in the care of the Captain who is much reformed in his carriage and free from drinking and quarrelling. PS Thinks it would not be amiss for Owen to write to Sir John Trevor ... and send him the names of the proposed chief officers, if Owen can pitch upon them so soon. vtls005594715 ISYSARCHB54	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The Duke of York arrived that day and was received very kindly everywhere on his way to Whitehall; 61 guns were loaded at Tower Hill Wharf to proclaim his reception. It is expected that they will suddenly see a revolution of affairs. The Duke of M(onmouth) is talked of amongst the commonalty with greater zeal than the Duke of York, and his entertainment in the country is so great that it creates jealousy. The writer thinks there may be bonfires towards Whitehall that night, but few in the city. The wench who feigned herself sick of the 'timbany by your means' is dead: it is so common that it is impossible to stifle it 'for I hear it spoken of noe where but where your cordiall freinds are; it were imposition to make a deniall of it amongst them'. He has not seen Gadbury or Clarke since the receipt of Owen's letter, but Clarke by imbibing Hobbs's 'tenents' is called Hobbs by some men about town. Sir William Waller has ordered a new dagger - he is resolved to discover more priests. Bedloe and his fair spouse lie in Fleet St where 'a brisk man like you may have a bitt for his catt': Bedloe's salary is very much deducted, and the writer fears that he will be forced at last to pimp for his wife for a livelihood. Hopes to have some considerable news for Owen in his next letter. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 784. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 785. vtls005594716 ISYSARCHB54	File - Richard Jeffrey to Ellis Lloyd at his chamber in The Temple, 1679/80, 26th February. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: An account of fees of the commission of colonel of the regiment of foot £5 - lieut. colonel £4 - major £3 - captain of horse £3 - three private captains £6 - deputy-lieutenant in two counties £4 - total £25. The troop and regiment being in two counties, the writer may well expect more on the whole, i.e. £5 - total £30. The writer depends on Sir John Trevor and Lloyd for these fees, and should hardly part with the commissions but as they undertake for them without his fees. He is glad to serve so worthy a gentleman as Sir Robert Owen, and does not question his payment, although the writer is a stranger to him. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 785. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

But he now guesses from Owen's last letter that he is as good as smitten, and so will no longer be a heretic in love - 'and therefore Good Lord deliver you'. The writer will take care to give the credit desired by Owen and pay Mr Jeffreys in a day or two. He is sure that Jeffreys expects something more of which Owen says nothing. Jeffreys is known to love money extremely well: what Owen pays is a considerable sum, though the ordinary fees and therefore fair. When Owen has his estate, the writer knows he will make the best advantage of it, and hopes that he may live to see him as great as his own heart can wish. PS How Owen rejoices in the misfortune of poor Mr Griffith; but let him have a care of falling into the same mischief himself.

The writer wishes that all those the King is pleased to trust with employment had a like sense of what they owe him, and zeal for his service; he and his government would then be secure from whatever his enemies within or without his kingdoms could attempt against him. Worcester rejoices much, for the King's sake, in Owen who shows the stock he comes of. He is very willing that Owen should take May for his own affairs, and does not doubt in June the performance of what Owen is pleased to promise any more than he does any other of his expressions. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 787. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 788. vtls005594719 ISYSARCHB54	File - Humffrey Hughes, at Gwerckles, to Sir Robert Owen, 1680, 18th May. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: If Owen's letters had been addressed to any place in Edeyrnion they would not have been returned. On receipt of Owen's letters, the writer at once went to his cousin, Mr Owen Eaton, his neighbour, the writer having been informed that Mr Justice Owen Wynne and Mr Ellis Young (were) two of the trustees of Mr William Salesbury of Rug's estate, and showed him Lord Worcester's and Owen's letters to the county informing them of his Lordship's request to divide out to the public employment what public arms, drums and banners were there; this he did, not knowing how suddenly the trustees might depart, and the agent there resident having last year answered him that he could part with none of them without the privity of the trustees. He now hopes for a good account of the arms, etc. His Lordship's letter gives good hope that, consistent with the King's service, the convenience of the county will be considered. Last year having received like letters, and warrants having been issued by the gentry in Uwch Carnethvan, and none resident with the writer in Penllyn and Edeyrnion, the writer went over to Bala to see Mr Vaughan of Llwydiarth and told him how the country was averse to travelling to Dolgelley. They therefore agreed to send out warrants for a muster at Llandrillo, preceding the warrants to be at Dolgelley; for they have never found any precedent for those two hundreds of Edeyrnion and Penllyn going over Carnethvan, but still at Bala or elsewhere nearer. It gave satisfaction, and now they crave the like favour of Owen, because some will have to travel 30 miles ... It would strengthen this poor end of the county, and assist the writer's old age - he is 74 - for he would gladly leave all employment to younger men fitter to travel. Asks for a note of the time and place of musters and he will do the rest effectually. He will also send Owen's letters to Mr Richard Anwyl at Dolgelley - there is none nearer resident. 	Since his last he has not been able by all the inquisition he has used to find out anything that was satisfactory relating to fair Clarinda who repulsed Owen upon his own address. If Owen imagines a second attempt, fortified by another interest, may prove more advantageous, the writer would have him make another attack, hoping she may be more addicted to wedlock and yield to Owen's inclination. She designs to return speedily to town, and if Owen is so designed, he will find his old friend no less serviceable than faithful [faithful in MS], and ready to receive his instructions. The writer hopes that Norfolk air may have reduced her to compliance. She spoke very candidly of Owen and his merits before her departure. But upon inquiry into David Glynne's receipt, the writer discovered that he had - being very necessitous - spent no less than £10 of the said £50. The writer rattled him and told him that he had rendered himself incapable of further trust and the public service could not long suffer by his unfaithfulness, for he would in the end smart for it. The other five pounds were promised, but the writer doubts his performance. To avoid further extravagancies, the writer has ordered Mr Robert Evans to receive the £40 and to bring them to Owen. He also sends 50/- being Owen's rent for the old Shire Hall. He also knows that Owen will be pleased to pay Robert Evans £53.15.0 in silver, otherwise 50 guineas, to the writer's use; he will say no more about it, being sufficiently possessed with Owen's just and honourable dealings. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 794. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The writer thinks him very much improved in carriage and is in every way very well until he falls into seducers' company. The writer has paid 35/- for his cousin's coach hire, delivered him 30/- to bear his charges, and has laid out 40/- on necessities for him - i.e. a riding coat. Finding by his letter that Sir Robert has money enough, asks him to add £12 for the interest on the £200 due this month. The writer was informed that his cousin, Ellen Owen, is to lend Owen a sum of money: if this be so, the writer desires that 'this may pass for parte of the debt due to her from my uncle', John Lloyd of Maes-y-Pandu. If Owen had not been backward in acquainting his friends, Sir John Wynne could not outstrip him: Wynne's presents in Merionethshire are more influential than his parts or person. Since returning from Llangedwyn the writer has felt the Sheriff's pulse, and his answer was that if Sir Robert Owen designed to represent them, he should have been more stirring; they are worth the asking. If Owen despairs of attaining his end, yet he may, by opposing him, understand who are his true and constant friends. The young and ignorant dislike Owen because he voted for the D(uke of) Y(ork) in the last parliament; but the grave and wise - if they thought that he failed in their service - had no other resentment of his actions than what they imputed to his youth and what experience and ripeness of years may amend and rectify. The writer is of opinion that if they elect according to the general approbation of the gentlemen of the county, Owen may be pitched upon - i.e. if justice be cherished and maintained, ingratitude and gratuities rejected. Oh that the writer had the persuading power to hammer into the heads of these senseless people how unkind they were to an honest worthy gentleman, he would soon make them revolt and repent them of their actions! He is incapable of advising Owen in this particular, but this is his zeal, wish and opinion, and that it may be effected is the desire of J. V. He hears that only Sir Robert and Col. Price stand for the election. There was an agreement made between the gentry of this county that when such an occasion should happen, they were to secure their own particular interest, and not to declare until they had a private meeting before the election, and there it was partly known who should carry it. 'I presume there may be some Boults with the soonest shott', but the most discreet have reserved theirs until the most convenient time. Madame Anwyl's interest and Mr Vaughan's always go the same way, and most of the upper end of the county except Nannau which is not very considerable now. Rug is the most considerable in that end of the county, which the writer doubts may be secured for Col. Price, and the Sheriff not so cordial for Sir Robert as he ought to be. But if the Sheriff does what is fair and just, the writer is confident that Sir Robert will carry the election. There are but six freeholders in this parish, and they are for Mr Vaughan, besides his interest in other parishes which is very considerable. 'Lord God! a gentleman of so vigorous a constitution, and - in a manner - but young too to be snatched away thus in his prime.' A day or two before the writer had Owen's letter, he received a worthy token from Lloyd, and some money to purchase two of 'Dr Grew's musaeums'. Does not know now to whom he should send them, nor the pamphlets Lloyd had ordered, unless to Owen. Is deeply concerned for the loss of so worthy a friend. His own ill stars are not yet fully over, and to contend with fate is the way to be further worsted. As for news there is little stirring save that the King in Council has ordered the 'true Protestant joyner' to be tried at Oxford the 17th of this month, and preparations are being made for other trials: some lords, he hears, are taking, or have taken, pardons, and are to be witnesses against others, viz the Earl of Sh(aftesbury) and Lord Howard, etc. The Pr(ince) of Or(ange) is said to discover great things, namely how the Earl of S(haftesbury) and the Earl of Sunderland - one being then President of the Council and the other Secretary of State - plotted with the Hollanders by Mr Sidney, the ambassador, to do many mischiefs, the effect of which, it is thought, has been felt in the contradictory proceedings of the late English parliaments. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 802. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

If Owen could have been with him on this journey he would not have thought the time ill spent though clogged with the writer's dull conversation. But the writer thinks that Owen is not well dealt with by the gentlemen of Merionethshire if he be not continued in the same trust as was formerly reposed in him, when there is an occasion and especially the next time. As for Owen sending to expostulate with Sir John, the writer thinks it may do very well; but if it were the writer's case, he would also expostulate with his Merionethshire friends, to know the reason why they are so unkind to the recipient 'if you believe they will be soe'. She must confess that she esteems the name of that place more than the agent's friendship. The latter has been tenant of that small house for the last four years, and then not a word of the premises. She would that it were her own concern to serve him about that small house, but the latter belongs to her son, James Brynkir, and she cannot therefore conclude anything without the approbation of his trustees. As to the right of the foundation of the 'braue' fabric and the lands adjoining thereunto on that side of the river, it is the right of her son James, as she is given to understand, and that the river is the mere between Owen's lands and her son's, and that the highway runs through her son's freehold. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 806. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

When the writer required a lease in writing, the Colonel said 'Thou dost not mistrust mee and I am sure thou wilt not mistrust Will Owen, youre ffather meaninge'. The grant was for life, and the Colonel added that after the writer's death, it would yield him and his 40s. 'which I lett you have for 5 nobles dureinge life'. The writer has since allowed his brother-in-law to enjoy the same, and the writer has also since the grant been instrumental in saving Owen's renowned grandfather much money and trouble as Owen's Aunt Anwyl and Morris Griffith, then his servant, can inform him. Asks to be allowed to enjoy the croft according to the Colonel's intent. He will not contend with Owen, but supposes

The writer does not know of Mr Manley that is concerned, but supposes since the grant was only to him during pleasure, it was not upon such a valuable consideration but that the King may without injustice revoke it. If so, the writer knows of no man who has more just pretence to it, both on account of the merits of his family and his own than Sir Robert, nor no man that is likelier to make use of what interest he has for the King's service ... Clenennau letters and papers 819. vtls005594751 ISYSARCHB54	File - John Gadbury to Sir Robert Owen at Clennau, 1683, 8th May. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Received Owen's letter of April 30th on May 7th. He is sorry to send word that Owen's rejoicing at the Hans en Keldare [an unborn child] must receive its period, the Duchess having unfortunately this last week miscarried, but yet - blessed be God - is pretty well, and young enough to bring many a brave boy to town, and he hopes that some of the royal babes will live long also. But to exalt you again, it is certain news that Lady Anne is contracted to the King of Denmark's brother and that the marriage is speedily to be concluded, so that there are more hopes of lengthening the royal line. The City charter has been most learnedly argued by the Attorney-General for the King, by Mr Pollexfen for the City. The former has proved it forfeitable and forfeited; the latter endeavoured to prove it jure divino and unforfeitable unless every man in the city were a criminal. To whom the Lord Chief justice replied that if a charter

	were unforfeitable then every corporation was a kingdom of itself, and wholly independent of the crown of England, and unaccountable to the Kings thereof, who first gave them their privileges. Judgment alone is wanting, which all loyal and prudent men believe will pass for the King at the latter end of term. As to Owen's present affair, hopes his good stars may prosper it, his year in general seeming very kind and successful to him. PS The Duke of Ormonde has obtained a verdict against Hetherington of £10,000 damage for bringing him into the plot. Supposes that Lord Peterborough will shortly begin with Mansel and Dangerfield. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 819. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Sir Patience Ward - being indicted of perjury and now to be tried within a day or two - has run away to avoid the punishment of a perjurer. About four score arms - viz carbines, muskets, and pistols, etc., - have been discovered in a garret in Lord Grey's house, made up in bed mats: his Lordship is to answer it on Thursday next before the King and Council at Hampton Court. His Lordship is one of the rioters against whom a bill is found. Prince George of Denmark is expected in England shortly to marry Princess Anne, and it is said that Clarendon House is to be bought for him to live in. It is also rumoured that he will be made Duke of Gloucester and Lord High Admiral of England. The judgment on the City charter will be given on the first Tuesday next term, at which time Owen will hear, the writer conceives, of a custos put over the great City of London. The Whigs lose ground, and grow daily into more and more disesteem. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Judgment has been given today in the Kings Bench on the Quo Warranto proceedings relating to the charter of the city of London. It was pronounced by Mr Justice Jones - the Lord Chief justice being indisposed - with great gravity, learning and applause. He enlarged on the following points: corporations may forfeit franchises for unwarrantable acts, since their liberties are held of the King on a trust and condition of governing themselves well; the assumption of power by the city of London to levy money on the King's subjects was a breach of that trust and therefore good cause for forfeiture; the printing of that seditious petition was also a breach of the condition and a cause of forfeiture, since it vilified and exposed the King in the eyes of his subjects; ... they were all of the same opinion - and so was the Lord Chief Justice whom they had attended - and their unanimous judgment was that the franchises are forfeited and therefore are to be seized into the King's hands. The writer would be glad to find that Owen is near finishing his affairs there and coming up to ... torn ...us to push down the Whigs who are ... torn ... plotting as it were at last gasp. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 822. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Now the Lord Mayor, etc., apprehending their danger, on Monday last went to Windsor and petitioned the King for his grace and favour, and submitted to his royal pleasure. The King through the Lord Keeper told them that his resolutions were to approve of all lord mayors, sheriffs, recorders and other officers of Southwark for the future, and that they should return to the city to consider this and signify their compliance, otherwise the Attorney-General had orders to enter up judgment against them on Saturday next. It is believed that they will comply in all things. But now upon this happy news here is another plot discovered of four score Presbyterian villains in confederacy to kill the King and Duke of York. Some of them are in custody, but Mr Goodenough, the late fanatic under-sheriff who packed all the ignoramus juries, one of the confederacy, has run away. The Council has sat upon it close and long this day, but their resolutions being not yet known, the writer can send Owen no account thereof. Lord Chief Justice Saunders died yesterday morning. There never was more or stronger working against him than now by those who are afraid of his growing great. But he scorns what mankind can do and relies on her truth and honour ... Asks for leave to repeat his vows on paper to his utter infamy or credit in requital of her promise to him, which he solemnly vows no soul living knows of. He will never marry any one but Margaret Wynne, and seeing that they are both resolved as to the thing, why should they disagree on the time? If they propose happiness, as they certainly do, the sooner the better, or else better never. Is sure they will be happy ... Begs for a kind letter, for she knows that he is ruled by 'my dearest and only dear'; and by the love which he bears her and which she ought to bear him, begs her to hasten his joy and her own quiet. It is already decreed - as he can prove - by her mother or rather by her friends and 'our' base enemies that this treaty will come to nothing. He is willing to quit the world for her, otherwise may he never be prosperous in it ... Sends his service to Mr Rowlands and his lady until he hears that they are settled at Nant. (Evans) tells him that Judge Manley was buried as he came through Salop: the writer would not have grieved had it been his son for he has that paper about Harlech ready. Owen should write to the Chief Justice - the Duke of Beaufort not being in town - to move for him again, for the son must come into a large estate by his father's death. As for news, they trouble their heads with nothing except the success at Buda and Caminieck, and there cannot be more Te Deums for the taking of them than there are 'prechments' here among 'our Tecklit Protestants' against it. They are told from Scotland that not only has Spence, the Earl of Argyle's secretary, deciphered all his lord's letters - which very much confirm the Whig plot, - but also one Castairs there has confessed all he knew which is considerable though it is yet private. Mr Bagnall's lady being dead and buried in Westminster, he is going to France. The Duke of Monmouth is in Brussels where he 'divertizeth' himself with Lady Hen(rietta) Wentworth; and some say an army which is yet but imaginary will be found out for his Grace against spring to command against the Turk. The Pr(ince) of Orange may lend him some detached troops which are now being re-formed in Holland, but funds for their payment will not be so easily found out, nor shall he with the good liking of some here fight for a popish Caesar against a true Protestant 'Teckley'. The court is to be in town next Thursday on its way to Newmarket. The writer wishes Owen could be on Blackheath on October 1st, where some regiments are to be drawn up and to encamp. The King, Duke and Prince are to be there. One says it is to regulate the precedence of some regiments - that of Lord Dunbarton pretending to it before the Duke's: others think it is to declare Prince George generalissimo. PS Mr Evans speaks of a Quo Warranto against Oswestry: previous to that, breaches of the charter must be set down and sent up so that the Attorney-General may judge of them whether they will hold water. If Owen can assign such by the help of some lawyer there, asks that they be sent up soon. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 831. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Sends the bearer to learn how Owen and his lady are after their journey and long absence from Porkington where he hopes they are now resolved to fix. If Owen has ended matters amicably with the other lady, his sister-in-law, it is well, though it be to his loss, for he must value peace and quietness. But if things stand undecided between them, Owen may comfort himself with the assurance that equity will give the articles made on the marriage of his father-in-law mutual effect. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 833. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Sir John Trevor, knowing the esteem each individual in the company had for Owen, told them that the best advice in town had been taken on behalf of Owen's sister-in-law, Mrs Wynne. Feels obliged to give him intimation thereof so that he can act accordingly. Offers to secure legal help. Thinks it would not be amiss to get their worthy friend, Dr Edwards, to state the case. Is heartily glad to hear that Lady Owen is with child, and hopes God will make them in due time joyful parents. This town is grown as bad for murders as Paris formerly was: hardly a night but somebody is killed. The end of the town escapes pretty well. The scenes of blood are about the Temple, Fleet Street, Fetter Lane, etc. Mr Montgomery is found guilty of murder: so is Mr St Johns, Col. Webb and others: Mr Porter was found guilty of manslaughter only, but appeal is brought against him. It is said that the French King intends to make the Dauphin King of Navarre and to make him keep a court remote from him. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 834. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Wishing happiness of this and many, many more New Years. No one here moves about Harlech. Wishes Owen would write briskly to the Duke of Beaufort about it, stating his case and the qualities of him that has it. The writer cannot see what can be done since he has it for life. His Grace would be the best able to bring it about as well as most willing. Urges him to write to Sir Phillip or anybody else besides. Sends Owen a piece of Scotch truth which was squeezed out after some six or seven days' torture, which shows that the plot is deep and wide as Walcot said, and not so narrow and shallow as Lord Russell's speech-maker would have the world believe. One Bayly, called Jervais Wood in this paper, was hanged and quartered on Christmas Eve - for holidays are out of fashion in that country - and some more will be speedily dispatched. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 835. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The guns were fired and the royal standard put up. Yachts and men-of-war were ordered to cruise along all the coast of England to prevent any ships whatsoever from going or coming in for a period of forty days. The King has ordered that all men holding offices of government shall continue therein until further direction. PS In the hand of Richard Middleton: Came home on purpose to write to Owen, but Jack Owen has prevented him. The city continues very quiet. Told Mr Pierce Pennant that he did not well to neglect the advice of his counsel ... and that Owen was by knowing men in law and equity much blamed for his generous offer at Wrexham. Thomas David's account is in such order that there must be at least two or three days in settling the sum; and to that purpose care must be taken to divide it into several columns of what was particularly paid to Owen's mother-in-law and Mrs Pennant since the death of Mr Owen Wynne, payment of servants' wages, for the use of the house, and the burial of Mr O(wen) W(ynne) and his wife. Let there be mentioned in the account to what use Lady Owen took money from Thomas David, for the writer found in the book £80 delivered to her, which money he supposes was to be sent to Chester to pay for things had at Chester for the funeral. 	Humbly crave leave to inform Owen that there are as arrant true Protestant Jesuits in the Church of England as in France, Italy or Spain. What does Owen think of the author of Jovian who answered Julian? Owen should observe what the author writes on pages 79, 80, 96 and 299, and consider whether it be not as dangerous tolerating such churchmen as the wickedest of the dissenters. The writer could name some others who took part with Oates in his plot and made the pulpit as dangerous as he made the bar; and some others that forgot to pray for the Duke of York though the law and the church enjoined them. But God forbid that the whole Church of England should suffer for that. Only he wishes no knaves of any profession an indulgence. But letting things of that nature pass, he acquaints Owen that Lord Lovelace was brought to trial but pleaded his privilege; Mr W. Williams will be tried this term non obstante his election for Montgomery; Oates was sentenced this day to be whipped and pilloried. It is discovered that Bedlo hired Prance for £30 to swear in the case of Sir Ed(mund) Godfrey; and much talk of his funeral sermon laying the murder on the Papists before any evidence appeared of the fact. Oates's mother never believed the plot, but used to say it could not be true; and how she remembered when she went with child of him, she always dreamed that she was with child of the devil. Ferguson it is said has been taken at Quinborow. Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys is made a baron; and Mr Pepys will be the same. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 841. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 842. vtls005594774 ISYSARCHB54	File - W(illiam Lloyd, Bishop of St) Asaph, 1685, 13th June. to Sir Robert Owen, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Owen could not expect any other success about Harlech when he heard Lord Jeffreys was engaged for another. Jeffreys's interest is too great this time for any ordinary man to contend against. This morning when the King came into the House of Lords he acquainted the House by the Lord Keeper that at about 6 o'clock that morning he had received by an express a letter from the Mayor of Lyme telling him that on the 11th inst. in the evening, a ship of 30 guns had appeared before Lyme together with a 'catch' of 100 tons and a fly-boat of 200. There was no suspicion of them at first: but after awhile five boat loads of men put off from the off-side of the ship, who being covered by the cob - as they call their high land by the haven - came up the back way into the town when they were revealed to be the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Gray with about 150 men. The Mayor knew his danger for the town is full of fanatics. The Mayor immediately fled to Honyton, 11 miles off, from where he wrote to the King. Two officers of the Custom House of Lyme have made oath to the King that they have seen the Duke and Lord Gray. A declaration of loyalty to the King has been presented by the Lords at the banqueting house. The Commons made a similar vote adding the epithet 'the ungratefull traytor James, Duke of Monmouth'. This mad attempt of these infatuated rebels is the less surprising, for they heard since the beginning of the month that the Duke had left the Texel on the last day of May, and ever since the King has been providing for him and taking those into custody who were likely to side with him. The Duke of Albemarle reports from Devonshire that he is within 15 miles of Lyme and has about 4,000 men with him. They hope to engage the rebels before Saturday night. Then the Duke who now styles himself Protector of the Protestant Religion and Laws will have much ado to protect himself out of the kingdom if the King has any frigates - as apparently he has with Sir Roger Strickland on that coast. There have been many Whig libels about the town last night and the night before which show that some were privy to that which now appears. The Earl of Argyle and his party continue in the Isle of Bute where they are besieged by the King's frigate, and they will have much ado to get from there. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 842. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The King informed both houses that morning when Lords and Commons expressed their loyalty. The writer has no doubt of Owen's zeal and sense of duty in having his militia ready to oppose any that have such traitorous designs. Yet has thought it wise to remind him of this, and to exhort him to more than ordinary watchfulness - especially since he is on a sea coast and consequently more liable to such attempts. PS On this occasion it is necessary both to secure dangerous persons and to seize the arms of those who are suspect: they have the power to do one as justices of the peace, and the other as deputy-lieutenants. Dorset: To be communicated to the deputy-lieutenants and the justices of the peace in Caernarvonshire. He has to add to that which is written on the other side that Bridgewater is taken by the King's forces, and most of the rebels in it. Monmouth himself fled with not more than forty horse towards Wells where he deserves but slender entertainment. He hopes to leave the place from where he writes tomorrow and will wait on Owen at Glyn or Clenennau shortly. PS Service to his good neighbour Mrs Jones. Dorset: To be left with Mr John Rowlands at Caernarvon. On another page: A flying packet came from Scotland on Saturday with the news that Argyle had been beheaded in Edinburgh on the Tuesday before. He wrote a full confession of all he knew of the conspiracy. But he denied knowledge of what was chiefly inquired into, saying that he did not know the person who brought him money. He died pleasantly for he had his head cut off in an engine they have for that purpose called a 'mayden' which takes off a head at one stroke. On the scaffold he made a canting speech in scripture language exhorting all men to have a care of the Protestant religion ... but nothing of the course he had taken to ruin that religion. Rumbold was hanged

	on the previous Saturday ... confessing without repentance that he would have killed the King if he could have got him in his power. Both he and Argyle inveighed against M(onmouth) for taking the crown, whereas when they parted from him he swore the contrary. Ayliff repents of his wickedness and it is hoped that he will both recover and discover. Sir John Cockram and his son are taken and there is now no news of rebels together in Scotland, and the writer hopes that soon there will be no news of them in England. For that morning an express came from the army by Sir Christopher Oglethorpe - he who gave the rebels the blow at Canesham Bridge - acquainting the King that he was sent out to scout on Sunday night from Sedgemoor where the army lay encamped as far as Bridgewater without hearing or seeing the enemy. Meanwhile M(onmouth) and Gray marched out with the rebel army except some 500 whom they left to keep the town. M(onmouth) had ordered them to march in perfect silence on pain of death, so that Oglethorpe did not perceive when he passed by him. At 2 am they were within pistol shot of the sentinel of the King's army before they were heard or seen. The sentinel having received no reply to his challenge, fired and gave the alarm to the guard who stood to arms. The rebels immediately gave a volley of shot, and the alarm was thus given to the army ... who put a stop to the enemy by the help of a very good ditch that defended the camp on that side ... A company of grenadiers received the rebel horse so briskly and put them in such confusion that Gray who commanded them ... gave over the service and fled. M(onmouth) saw him and called out 'Cowardly rascal!', but that would not fetch him back. The foot headed by M(onmouth) stood to it stoutly for three hours - being more in number than the King's - but at last they ran after the horse. About 400 rebels were killed on the place, and in flight as many more as made up 2,000. Monmouth's three field pieces, twenty-two colours, his secretary and all his papers are taken, as well as his steward with all his money which was but little. His valet also who attended him with his cloak and star was taken; this fellow is 'our countryman', one Williams, son of the widow who keeps the inn at Buarth beyond Talycafn. After the battle Ferguson was found dying of wounds in a ditch. On the King's side about 200 were killed and 100 more disabled. No officers were lost, but Mons. Chevalier who was a lieutenant in the guards, and Captain Ferdinando Hogbin, and Captain Scarsfield of Ireland are dangerously wounded. Lord Dunblane, the Earl of Danby's son, who was a volunteer there, was wounded in the shoulder but not dangerously. M(onmouth), it is thought, escaped back to Bridgewater. But the Earl of Feversham presently sent Lord Churchill with 500 horse and 500 foot to summon the town: what answer he had they expect to hear by another express. The King had 1800 foot and 700 horse in the action, until the Earl of Pembroke came in with the Wiltshire men in the middle of the fight and did very good service. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 845. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

That day the King returned to Windsor. On Thursday, June 3rd, the campaign opens on Hounslow. Doubts not but that Owen's curiosity will lead him there before it's done. The holidays are over without disorders, though some apprehension there was of it, from the seizure of some 'tickets' wherein the apprentices invited their comrades 'to go and whip the fox which was looked upon as a cant for some other sport they desired'. Libels are thrown up and down especially among the guards 'dehorting' them from bearing arms for or with Papists, but as Llewelyn swallowed all the darts that flew at him, so did the soldiers these libels by melting them down at sixpence apiece. The French King is still statu quo; he had once resolved on a voyage to Barrege to bathe, which is at the foot of the Pyreneans, and would have cost him twenty-one days. But upon a 'consult' he is off again, and his 'corps' is not thought competent for such a fatigue. The court being at Windsor, Lord Tyrconnel having set out with his caravan for Ireland, the women and the citizens being at the Wells and the red-coats at Hounslow, all makes St James's Park very thin ... 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The writer is glad of an opportunity to be revenged on Owen by wishing him also joy of his mayoralty: hopes the business and fatigue of it is not quite so great and indispensable that he will not be able to see London in spring. But he is afraid that the Magna Carta of English custom will dispose Owen to keep Christmas within his own government. The French King is worse than the enclosed tells: his own possessions are now the only seat of war and disorder, where the wild 'effluvia' of a depraved body - like sulphurous breaths locked under earth or like so many of his own fierce dragons - armed with pointed pain seem willing to quit their decaying castle and force their way out at the sally-port of his backparts. The committee to inspect the justices of the peace of England and Wales will put in several new ones - among the rest some Catholics it may be as well as Whigs - and will put out most of those who were in and did not act. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 855. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: They are in more than ordinary hurry with the court's return to town that evening. Lord Eland died here last Friday, and his uncle, Henry Saville, the day before in Paris. The second son should have married Sir Samuel Grimston's eldest daughter on the following day, but he being now the lord the settlement must be altered. General Dunwald has taken 'Estek and Walpo' at the close of the campaign or rather found them abandoned. Their great neighbour is mightily out of humour and none knows why.

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Promised that he would endeavour to have the King's mind known as to G. and Owen's coming up. This morning Mr H. hinted to the King that there was a report as if intercession had been made on his behalf, but the King replied shortly that he was resolved to have him tried. Thus Owen can resolve upon his journey. Wishes Owen could have been spared it at this time of the year, but hopes that Lady Owen's company will render it more tolerable. Owen may fix his own day for his trial provided it be after fourteen days within the term. The Bishop of Chester, the Chief Justice and Baron Jenner are added to the ecclesiastical commission and set out tomorrow to visit Magdalen College in Oxford.

Both his and his virtuous lady's ancestors have favoured them on like occasions, and they hope that even in this he will not degenerate from them. He has no doubt that Owen has perused and considered well the King's recent declaration for liberty of conscience, and has been thereby convinced of the King's intentions to use his utmost endeavour to have the same made law, and intends soon to call a parliament to have the same effected ... The King has therefore commanded the writer and the other lieutenants to put the following questions to the deputy-lieutenants and the justices of the peace. Desires Owen's answers by the bearer as soon as he can. The three questions which follow seek to determine the recipient's attitude to the repeal of the Test Act and acceptance of the Declaration of Indulgence. The report is that the (French) fleet had joined the English fleet for protecting Danish merchants against the Dutch. Mr Sheridan, late secretary of state in Ireland, has come to London, but his cause is not yet heard by the King and Council to whom the Lord Lieutenant remitted it. He is in hope to come off very well. The young Prince is well, and it is said that when the Queen's month is up, he will be christened in the Abbey at Westminster, against which time glorious fire-works are preparing for the honour of that great solemnity. The good Earl of Sunderland has now declared himself a Roman Catholic, and has promised to stand by the King and his religion (to the) loss of his fortune and his life if occasion be. Yesterday the seven bish(ops wer)e on their trial. It lasted from 9 am till near 8 pm. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: On Saturday evening Mr Glynne and the writer attended Mr Meyrick who told them that he was without directions from Dr Wynne as to the value of the Nant estate. The writer told him that it was reputed to be £300 besides lead and coal, and that there was a very spacious house and stables and barns upon it. Does not know what passes between Owen and the Doctor, but he fears by what he gathers from Mr Meyrick and other hands that it may be too late for Owen's affairs to attend the dilatory way he will meet with here. They expect particulars of every field and how many years it bore the rent ... The little money the writer had he parted with and promised, which otherwise Owen would readily have had upon any lands in that county of Merioneth, but he would not be forward to appear for the Flintshire estate, being through God's mercy resolved to live in these parts. They hear that Mr Justice Hopton must be expected in Bala on 4th September. Gives sister Ellen by the messenger an account of the state they are in and the girdles. Is glad that Owen has a chapman to his liking, and would wish that he had a trusty friend near him, for he cannot see that Owen is likely to make a conclusion that way. The writer also wishes he were near Mr Glynne to have his sense of matters. But the dean is of the writer's opinion though he is in part trusted by Dr Wynne. The news of Mr Griffith's death reached this place at 3 am: many rejoice and many lament it. The writer is sorry for it if Griffith had a hearty friendship for Owen, and that the latter and the Colonel come to trial at law here, for they shall be governed by the sword ?here; none will feel more arbitrariness than 'we'. Hopes they will retain their fidelity to him, and though he does not expect that they should expose themselves by resisting a foreign army and a pestered nation, hopes that former principles are so rooted in them that they will keep themselves free from associations and such pernicious things. Appended is a copy of a letter initialled R. W. and sent from London and addressed apparently to the mayors of other towns: Announces that they are reduced to the sad condition of having been forsaken by the King who went last night beyond the sea. The Protestant parties of the army have already sent addresses of submission to the P(rince) of O(range). (copy in the hand of John Gadbury). Danger that the kingdom must very soon become the theatre of a most bloody and as irreconcilable a war as has been in Europe this age if not prevented by extraordinary prudence. There is not one of the ancient nobility and gentry in the assembly who has not himself or his ancestors received reiterated marks of bounty or clemency either from the present King or his predecessors. Should they then because of the misfortunes of a four years reign forget the benefits received from a hundred and ten kings and queens? Several members of the States and the Duke of Hamilton know what severe usage the writer has had from the Court these last three years. Yet he would lay down his life for a good understanding between the King and his subjects. If the States think fit the writer will attend on the King who is now in Ireland, and he hopes all Scotland will dutifully assert the prerogatives of the crown. Doubts not but the King will be ready to secure the property, religion and liberties of the subject on such foundations as can never hereafter be shaken by the avarice or ambition of evil ministers. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 876. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Hopes Owen has sent more of these petitions to the lower end of the county where Mr Mostyn and Mr Wynne may put people in mind. Thinks they will have very many hands, but Owen should have given one to Captain Wynne whom the Bulkeleys turn out of the commission of peace as well as the writer; also one to the Dean, Mr Glynne, Love Parry, Jack Owens, James Brynkir, and Nedd Williams. This would soon have brought Owen more hands than Lord Brandon has. If Owen engaged alone in this and no other Welsh member, and has not sent more of these prints, he must allow much time. The writer has not sent Mr Mostyn or Mr Wynne word of what Owen

	writes him ... but neither of them are of opinion that Sir William Williams will serve them. Is glad to hear that Owen is likely to have some employment for his brother Lewis ... Is concerned about earlier letters to Owen lest they fall into hands he would not wish. The Irish Protestants are routed and in a most miserable condition, God comfort them, and King James is for certain landed. The people are extremely pleased that there is a likelihood to pass the Ludlow bill and the hearth money. PS Has not heard whether Owen saw Mr Ow(en) Hughes. The latter dropped some kind sayings of Owen, and he has a mind to appear against some that are no friends of Owen's. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 877. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Desired his son, Tom, to tell Owen how things went at their work in Flintshire. There have been two master workmen there who expect great wages, whereas any country day labourer with one of them might serve as well. Therefore he thinks it will be best to dismiss one of them and save so much money. He has engaged his son Lloyd to look a little after them and to see that they want not timber or anything else to put the work forward. Since Owen is pleased to leave it to him, the writer will take all the care he can of it. Would be glad to hear that Owen had dispatched the great work of the nation that they might enjoy him in the country ... Finds that Owen is doing many good acts, and when he has done with the profitable, he would do well to think of the pleasureable for the preservation of the game on the mountain which is so decayed of late years. Servants are grown to that height that their ways ought to be considered wherein they grow so extravagant. Did he but know the many oppressions this poor country lies under he would have tenderness for them: they have been by that Coun(cil) the governors of these countries as ill used as the Frenc(h sub)jects. A few well tempered members to attend his Lordship would be of great use to 'us' and might make him as much their friend as he now seems to be against them. Has been asked by Owen's aunt Jones of this town, who has a case before the Lords, to desire him to do her what service he can in the matter. Encloses a letter to the Dean whom he hopes Owen will not only see often but serve if in his power. Wishes the Bishop of St Asaph and 'he' being together now might make an end of Owen's troublesome matters with the Colonel. If that were at an end Owen would be eased of suits which he is sure are not only chargeable but disturbful. Wishes also that they had the acts which Owen says Mr Fillingham sent to Shropshire, for they have only one to act in this county by, and none of the old ones, which is attributed to the neglect of their members, while their neighbours have good stores of them. Is sorry the Dean meets with opposition among 'your' haughty lords: the North Wales members who pretend to be all his friends might do him service by going all in a body to the Bishop of Sarum so that the Bishop might give the King an account that such request had been lodged with him by such men to put to the

	King. But the writer would have nothing of this done without the Dean's privity, but he hopes it would put by the pretensions of this fanatical lord who puts up in these parts. Reminder of a former hint to Owen to spend an afternoon with Mr Ow(en) Hughes: the latter hinted good things when the writer had some discourse with him. Services to Lady Owen, sisters Ellen and Jane and brother Lewis. PS Service to Owen's cousin, William Madryn; and Dick Madryn of Llannerch Fawr should be put in Owen's poll bill - he is a man of good estate, Owen's kinsman, and 'alleges man'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 879. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The Receiver-General agreed upon is Ned Jones who promised this week to bring his security, and when he has given bond such an account as Mr Fillingham expects will be sent to the office. 	Has sent to Owen, Lady Owen, and their worthy brother and sister an almanac for the ensuing year. Parliament, having been feasted by the City on Lord Mayor's Day, put it to the vote whether to return them thanks, but carried in the negative. Colonel Ludlow is gone beyond sea. The late Lord Chancellor's estate is voted to be forfeit. The Pope has sent the French king three millions of money, part whereof - namely one million - is said to be for King J(ames). He has also sent Queen Mary a noble present and settled a pension upon her during her exile. He has also proposed terms of agreement between the Emperor and the French King - namely the restoring of Lorraine which it is believed the French King will consent to. The Duke of Brandenburg has left the confederates, and some think he will join with France. Iniskilling is reported to be taken and 130 men in it. The Duke of Ormonde and the Earl of Marlborough are returned from Flanders. It is said that General de Lozine has not only landed with 9,000 men in Ireland, but has retaken Carickfergus and blocked up the Newry. Lord Griffen is in the Tower. Lord Preston is committed to the Black Rod, his patent for an English baron being dated from St Germans. One Mr Holles, a lawyer, made a speech in the House, wherein he alleged that in his opinion the House was mistaken in their impeachments of the Lords, etc., for the Act of Parliament upon which the impeachments were grounded called it treason to be reconciled to the Church of Rome, and thereby to withdraw their allegiance from the King, which the persons impeached could not be guilty of, they tarrying with the King until the desertion and still paying him allegiance - the King of the same persuasion with Rome and had pardoned the persons impeached. Has heard of nothing more done in the matter. Lord Arran and Lady Hannam are bailed out of the Tower. Kensington House fell down on Monday last, and Hampton Court has become the royal palace again. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 882. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

On the following Sunday they set sail and were in Plymouth by two o'clock the following day. The regiments which they expected to be waiting there were not embarked: now that the wind is changed God knows when they will go. Walking the town one day the writer met with his uncle Carew who wondered to see him 'and I him'. His uncle makes much of him and tells him that he will supply anything he wants. Money is very scarce, the writer's sickness and lodgings having robbed him of about two months' pay. Asks his sister not to take it ill if he borrows five or ten pounds from his uncle: going into an enemy country they do not know how they will receive their next month's pay or how they will be received. A little money will do no harm, and Col. Lloyd will not have much to spare, for 'we' paid him at Portsmouth four pence for every pound of their pay. If he had known whether or not 'brother' would have been at home, he would have written to him. Hopes he will be worth thousands coming back if he lives ... He is in the same vessel as the Colonel, and is well having wholly recovered his strength. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Received her letter of the 5th on the 20th. Is sorry to hear of his sister Rowlands's child's death. They are still expecting seven companies of the Duke of Bolton's regiment, the other six having come and embarked that day. Their regiment, Col. Trelawney's, Col. Lutterel's, Sir John Guise's and the aforementioned are now shipped. He hopes he will be able to breathe with them, for he is very foggy after his sickness. Col. Lloyd is going to London very speedily. The sickness is beginning to decrease: officers think that the men ate some unwholesome meat aboard ship, for when they are taken ill their heads swell mightily and they are deaf. The following day came the unexpected news of his departure, together with a desire from Col. The writer was as careful as if the gentleman had been his own brother to do for him when he was alive, so he did what lay in his power to have all decency used at his funeral which was performed with as much solemnity and ceremony as present circumstances would permit. Every pair of gloves was disposed of, and the pall has been returned. As for what Lewis Owen left behind, he can only say this, that he gave the writer nineteen guineas to lay by, and two days before Owen died nine of these were given on Owen's instructions to Ellis Ashpoole. The latter took everything else to the value of two pence and locked it in his trunk, and now he keeps the keys. Nothing has yet been disbursed for the funeral except what the writer has laid out. The writer will be expected to pay the rest which will come to more than the gold by some pounds. It has been a considerable trouble and charge, but doubts not that the Colonel or the recipient will repay him. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The enclosure will show Owen what state they are in at Glyn. He is sure they would have been much better if Owen's affairs had kept him from a London journey. Owen must not take it too much to heart though it is a very considerable loss to him and to his family. Mr Carew has no doubt given him some further account. It is reported that with many officers he was poisoned with meat ashore; the writer fears more the corrupt meat he had at sea. God forgive those monsters and bring to light their base practice. If Owen sees the Bishop of Bangor he is to let him know that his family are well. Prays let there be some end between Owen and Col. Price - there are many ill-wishers who would have Owen be at expense. The writer has been forced to take his oath as justice in this county. Suggests that Owen should remind his Lordship to consult some persons for their opinion whether these preachers ought to have more than one place to hold forth in: it is one of the last paragraphs in the Act. 'Mr Edwards's confessor hath put in a note for 3 places viz Cappell Towill, Cappell Helig and Pullhely'. Owen may if he pleases inform the Bishop that the writer's namesake has taken his oath and if care be not taken will have more auditors than 'our vicar'. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 890. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

He is now resolved not to stir and to expect the event of his letter, but whether he will continue in this mind is not certain. Mr Septurn's deputy was pressing for £15 fees: they made shift to ease the sheriff by paying 50/- down, and telling him that care would be taken at London to satisfy Mr Serjeant. The writer need not tell Owen how much this matter is spread to Owen's disadvantage and what care there is to give a due account of it: the writer may reasonably judge by what he observes in this county who promoted it. 'All here are your servants and wish this may have that influence upon you. 	He attended all last week about some money, which he was disappointed of, and is extremely troubled that he has not it ready for him. But he has £200 at London ready to be paid where Owen shall appoint within a fortnight after Michaelmas; the remaining £252 shall be ready as possible, and if he in the least inconveniences Owen by it he cannot but look on himself as obliged to satisfy the interest wherever Owen pays it. He believes he will be going for England within this fortnight, and then if Owen pleases he can order Owen his money in London. When he hears from Owen he will give order for the £200, and will not be slack in providing the other. The writings he received, but those that are most material, viz the purchases from Morgan of Gwlgray and the survey, he will be glad to have when Owen meets them. He desires that Owen would not think hardly of him for this failing of him, for in anything that is in his power he will endeavour to make amends. His own and his wife's faithful service to his good lady. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 898. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 899. vtls005594833 ISYSARCHB54	File - Susanna Burdwood, at Liskeard, to Richard Carew, MP, At Westminster, 1690, 6th November. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: She has sent to Mr Francis Hill of Plymouth for the £10 which she understands Carew had left to pay what she was out for Mr Owen. But she was surprised to find that Carew had recalled the money of Mr Hill, and that Col. Ffloyd was to pay. She has applied to the Colonel both before and since he went to Ireland, and she has been informed that she shall never have a penny from him. She assumes that Carew has never been informed of her misfortune from having taken his kinsman into her house, for it is evident that she thereby lost her husband and is left in so mean a condition that £10 is a considerable part of the stock she has to live on. The money is owing to a neighbouring shop-keeper from whom her husband fetched the wares for the funeral, and he is now calling for it. Begs him to pay or to let her know the names of Mr Owen's brother, mother and sister and where they live. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 899. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 900. vtls005594834 ISYSARCHB54	File - Edmund Wickins, at Whitehall, to Sir Robert Owen, MP, at Porkington, 1690/1, 6th January. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Thanks Owen for the favours received from his family. Now that he is parson of Sunningwell he is sure that Owen, Lady Owen and Madame Ellen will be glad to hear that he is doing well. He had expected to live amongst them this year following, but his Lordship had promised the writer's school to a Scotchman, a very excellent scholar and one who has been driven out of his country by the 'plaguey', hypocritical Kirk, before the writer reached this town, 'so that I shall never brush any more bums at Oswestry'. Asks Owen not to mention the matter of the Scotchman's coming to the school until he finds him there; for Savage shall gather the quarterages before the Scotchman comes or his coming is known; otherwise the quarterages will be very small if they hear the writer has gone, and this - the New Year - quarter is the best. The King went to Holland this day, and Will Lloyd and Monsieur d'Avaux waited on the King. Mr Evans will shortly be with Owen, so that his Lordship having no one with him has engaged the writer to stay until they return. After that he intends to visit Sunningwell, and then he hopes to spend the summer with his dear friends about Oswestry. Last night he visited his good friend Mr Powel with whom he drank Owen's health, and that of other worthy friends - he and she - about Oswestry. He loves the place 'for the few good about', it and would be as happy as a monarch if he could but carry Sunningwell on

	his back there. He has not spent Owen's tokens, but he will give an account as soon as he has time and opportunity. Hopes Owen takes no offence at the writer's action in withstanding his agent, since he was concerned for Mr William Lewis Anwyl whose right many affirmed it to be. He has sent Sir Hugh Owen a true state of the case, and he has assured the writer that Owen was not a person inclined to invade any man's right, and he was therefore willing to join in a commission for examining witnesses or to refer the matter to the Bishop's determination. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 901. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1690/1, 12th February.

Hopes she will not retract anything which she was pleased so freely to bestow, nor permit the writer to receive further trouble from any other person. She confesses she has been more nobly dealt with than she should have been from many others, although probably she would have fared best if it has pleased God to restore Mr Owen to health, whose generous mind and temper differed far from many of that profession. She realises that it would be more becoming to sympathise with her correspondent than to make reflection on her own unhappiness occasioned by the quartering of that sick regiment in this place, and so will forbear from troubling her correspondent with what befell her whole family on that occasion. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 902. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1690/1, 23rd February.

But both set out of town on Friday by John Symmonds, a Shrewsbury carrier who sets up there at the White Lion. If the bible does not please he will conclude that the lady who is to pay for it is as difficult to please in this as in a husband. Mr Craster has not yet gone for his Spanish embassy: the writer now knows him by sight and sees him sometimes. Owen did not take notice of the writer's mention of a Merionethshire youth who wishes to return home to be employed by Owen or some other honest gentleman. He told Owen then what he thinks the youth is good for. Begg pardon for this and other troubles which Owen's good nature have encouraged the writer in. Lord Dartmouth is still in the Tower, but Lord Preston is bailed out of Newgate. When the fate of Limerick is known the campaign by sea and land will likely be at an end, though that in Savoy only begins. The Elector of Bavaria designs to be there about the 4th/14th instant. The Turks and Germans are also by this time together by the ears, the Grand Vizir having got 100,000 men at Essek when the Germans expected nothing less and nothing more than peace. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 905. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 910. vtls005594844 ISYSARCHB54	File - Trevor Lloyd, at Bergenvpzoom, to Sir Robert Owen at Porkington, 1692, 19th May. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Lest the writer may not have another opportunity of acquainting Owen with the affairs of this 'watery element', he must let him know that their regiment - Col. Selwin and Col. Beveridge - are forthwith ordered for England, and likewise some of the horse. They give but a scurvy character here of the stiffnecked people of England. Various are the discourses 'we have', and not fit to be here inserted. 'However, we have tickled John the Frenchman's fancy at a pass two dayes agoe which they thought to force about Han where it cost 'em the best parte of 200 men'. It is thought that K(ing) J(ames) will pass part of this summer on board the French fleet. They talk of a mighty preparation both at sea and land that the Frenchmen have made, and have some speedy design on the Militia - Have A Care. The King has viewed the whole army and made all his dispatches for opening the campaign which the writer had hoped once to see but now despairs of that glorious prospect. The King is now at Breda and designs soon for England in order to settle a sure foundation, etc. This is a dismal country fortified chiefly with hunger and cold, and the writer heartily takes leave with it. He supposes that Owen has heard of Capt. Thomas Lloyd being killed at Louvaine by his major. 'Haveing not answeard - as I suppose - my Coll.'s expectation with recruits, though as yet I heare litle of it, pray Sir when next you write to him be pleased to Epistolize a litle on my behalfe.' He wishes well and heartily prays for Owen, Lady Owen, Madam Ellen, Madam Jane, the young ones, wishing them long life and happiness here and eternal bliss hereafter. The writer had much ado to walk the streets and cross the Thames, affronted on both sides. He doubts not but the mob will set the town ablaze before morning or do some considerable mischief - they never wanted bleeding so much as at this juncture. Since the enclosed was printed - being 4 at noon - an express came of a mighty success to the English fleet and there is a design for a speedy descent into Normandy. Clenennau letters and papers 912. vtls005594846 ISYSARCHB54	File - C. Humphreys, off Lahoo on board the Sovereign, to Sir Robert Owen at Porkington, 1692, 23rd May. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Sends this letter as a performance of his promise to give an account of what occurred. On Thursday last they engaged the French off the Isle of Wight, beginning between 11 and 12, and continued briskly until after 4, all which time their Blue Squadron, for want of more wind, could not come to engage. But

	the wind increasing they came in about 6 and assisted stoutly until 8, and then the night put a cessation on both sides. So they lay by until the morning expecting then to engage afresh, but they came not in sight of their enemies until 12 on Friday and could not come up to them that night. The enemy was so ill-mannered as not to stay for them. But they came to anchor off Cape de Hague, and the enemy came to anchor likewise, but nearer the race where there came so violent a tide that many of them were forced from their anchors and by that means their fleet was separated, one part sailing for Brest and the other eastwards. This obliged the English fleet likewise to separate, and the Red chased to eastward. The writer's ship Vice Admiral being of the Red, he cannot yet give an account of the Blue or their transactions. But the Red had not chased three hours when the enemy's ships were forced to divide themselves again: Sir Ralph Delavall chased three of their capital ships ashore at a place called Sherbrook [Cherbourg] and about 12 on Saturday 'we' came to anchor, leaving Mr Russell under sail chasing the rest. When they anchored at Sherbrooke the ships ashore and the forts fired briskly until 3, but the guns would not reach the enemy, 'neither durst we goe in further for fear to rune ourselves aground, our ship drawing soe much water soe that we were forced to stay for the tyde of ffloud'. But on Sunday about 3 in the morning they stood in and engaged briskly on both sides till 8. Then they disabled the great ships and fireships were ordered in which burnt all three, and before 12 they blew up. Fifty odd prisoners were taken, who said that above 1,500 men were blown up and that one of the ships was of 110 brass guns, which was Turvill's own ship. Another, they said, was of a 100 guns which was a vice-admiral, and the third a ship of 96 guns: their names were - Royal Sun, Admirable, Triumphant. As soon as these were blown up they made all sail after Mr Russell whom they found at an anchor this day in this place, having forced 7 or 8 ships more ashore, two of which are now burning, and the writer presumes they will not depart hence until the rest are either burnt or sunk. PS Hopes Owen will excuse mistakes since he knows the writer never reads over his letters. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 912. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

MP, at Porkington, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Personal matters. If Owen is for the Bath good company will keep him there, so that the writer begins to doubt of seeing him in London, though perhaps a London plaster will be as good as the Bath waters. The writer has now before him a lump of ore which promises well at view, and he has been told that it was dug up behind or near Owen's house in Merioneth, and that a quantity of it has been sent to other parts. If it is from Owen's ground, he should see to it that it be not begged from him. Sir O. Price is like to lose his for upon a late trial a rich silver mine is found and Lord Newport is one of the chief against him. Owen's may be as good, and while it sleeps in the earth will not disturb its neighbours, and one would rather let it sleep on in its dross and dust than rouse it to make war against its proprietor. A trial cannot well be made under two or three pound' weight of ore. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 913. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Has received two of Owen's letters - one wherein he is pleased to be godfather to the writer's son, and the other from Glyn. His wife and he thank Owen for the honour he did them. He will take care of Owen's treasure when it comes and give him an account of its excellency - but Owen does not say whether he is to stay until Owen returns from the Bath, where the Bishop of St Asaph now is and finds much benefit for his shoulder, the pain which he thought was paralytic being well abated in ten days. The Princess will be there in about twelve days. The news from Frandels is not good 148 officers are said to be killed and near as many disabled in the lists that run up and down besides 6,000 common soldiers. But what adds to their misluck at present is that their descent fleet having been at sea for some days, and as was thought in France, is now returned back to Portsmouth full freighted with difficulties and objections started by the general officers upon the opening and reading of their commissions, whether about some niceties of rank and precedence between the English Admiral and high Dutch General, or rather about the design itself and the place of landing in France, the writer knows nothing of, but what is blown about by uncertain hearsays. However these seven lords, Carmarthen, Pembroke, Devon, Dorset, Nottingham, Rochester and Sidney - and seven has hitherto been an auspicious number - are gone down this morning to the fleet in order to conjure and over-rule this evil spirit of contradiction and to compose all differences which the writer wishes they may do for the public good and spare that trouble to the House of Commons. Supposes the Bishop of Bangor is in those parts - if this finds Owen at Glyn: if so thinks Owen should not give the Bishop this news - bad news is winged more than enough. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 914. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Mr Wynne having perused Mr Rees Wynne's will and the deed Mr Hanmer mentioned was as dissatisfied with the title as ever, there being not a word of Cefn Trevor specified in the will, though of all the rest of the lands in Merionethshire particularly, which created a stronger ambiguity in it, insomuch that Mr Wynne declared it not at all safe to go on unless something appears to clear these doubts. Though Mr Hanmer proffered all his lands in Montgomeryshire to counter-secure the title, that did not satisfy Mr Wynne at all, Mr Hanmer's lands there being worth £110 per annum ... The writer has seen Mr Hanmer who would refer the title to the opinion of the judges and if they judged it valid the charge of retaining them would fall on them, but if otherwise it will fall on Mr Hanmer. The latter says that Mr Robert Price, one of 'our' counsel, asserted the title to be good and that he would argue it to convince Mr Wynne. The writer knows that Mr Price was convinced at Bala. But it has now been decided to submit the matter to Mr Eubule Thelwall whom Mr Hanmer will attend on Friday. If it be made out a good title Lady Owen will be told immediately - if not, no further proceeding will be taken. The writer has to attend Cardiganshire sessions this week 'there being a sparke under imprisonment to be prosecuted against and strong evidence.' He has consulted his master about it. 	Now that the campaign is over in Merioneth it is time to think of that in Westminster which is to open this day month - that critical day and the King's birthday which has hitherto proved the most successful of any for him. It was thought the campaign in Flanders was also at an end, until news arrived today that the French have invested Charleroi, which may retard the King's coming for some time. Poor Dr Sparks has died at the Bath of some kind of dropsical distemper, so that the Muses may now repay to his tomb that respect he showed them in his life. The writer has not heard of any effect the earthquake has had in this part of the world, unless it be that it has discovered a spring in Flanders which has become a torrent, and a rich salt mine in Yorkshire of great length and breadth, and that the sea may contribute as well as the land to enrich the North. The Scots have had two or three whales thrown up upon their shore. The Speaker expressed great respect and affection towards Owen - which may not be improper for him to take notice of in a letter of thanks - and earnestly desires Owen to excuse him if he does not at present acknowledge the receipt of Owen's letter, which he protests is occasioned by the late sitting of the House, which quite tires him in the weak condition he is in, not having recovered from last summer's fit of sickness. His Lady, he says, will speedily reply to one she lately received from Lady Owen. The Master of the Rolls died last night, who will be succeeded, the writer hopes and believes, by the Speaker. Though the Lords have passed a vote in favour of theirs, that application - or some other word to that effect - will be made to the King that the Speaker may be made a lord and Master of the Rolls. PS Mr Vaughan and the writer remember Owen in their cups frequently. The Speaker has a promise of the Rolls. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Clenennau letters and papers 920. vtls005594854 ISYSARCHB54	File - Probably to Sir Robert Owen from a correspondent in Leyden,	1692/3, 10th - 13th January. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: The business of Tergoes is not yet ended. There are but four ministers that belong to the town and they all refused to pray for the new magistrates - he supposes he need not repeat the story of that town - but in general terms prayed for all lawful authority, for which they were severely reprimanded. But they still continued so to do and at the close of the prayers constantly remembered the old magistrates praying, that God would comfort them in their afflictions and give them courage to support it. They thought that was not enough and joined in a letter to the King as Stadholder asking him to extend his clemency to them. But the King being extremely affronted at their procedure sent immediately to the states of the province of Zealand to have the ministers suspended: this the states refused to do urging that there was no law for it. He then endeavoured to make them retract what they had written, which one of them was persuaded to do, but the rest persisted though threatened with banishment as movers of sedition. They have now written circular letters to the chief clergy of Utriche and Leyden to know whether they can or ought in conscience to pray for the new magistrates, and if not, asking them to join in interceding for the old burgomasters with the Stadholder, showing at the same time that when the liberty and privileges of the civil magistrate are invaded the Church must needs suffer and must afterwards be subject to such an arbitrary dependence as was directly contrary to the freedom of the gospel. It is not easy to conceive how this has affected the most sober of men, even in those provinces which are most zealous for the Stadholder. The magistrates of Tergoes are sent prisoners to the citadel of Bolduck. There never appeared a greater sorrow in Tergoes: the streets were filled with weeping and mourning at their departure as if everyone were going to lose their parents or nearest relation. These intestine convulsions in the state together with the extreme poverty of the previous make everyone look for a sudden change in the fate of affairs. 'Our' efforts against France will not be greater next year than this. The States' army computed at 90,000 will not make 60,000 including the garrisons; and the fleet to join with the English will not be above 37 though 48 were resolved upon. The Generality - that is the seven provinces - are in arrear to the army and the fleet since this war in a sum of 20,009,533 guilders whereof the province of Holland owes 8,000,000 and odd thousand guilders, Zealand owes three, 'Gronniguen' three, and the rest proportionably, besides what the Generality owes. The province of Holland alone pays 6,000,000 interest per annum. England cannot help 'us' at the rate Parliament proceeds: funds must be settled upon and a great deal of ready money must be forthwith raised and the application thereof left to the discretion of the Stadholder. It is not in the power of Holland to support itself with any manner of reputation and continue

	the foreign portions they have hitherto paid. So England must in great measure supply that defect. If the best money in England is gone out of the country, 'we' are not in a better condition 'here'. If the States be obliged to pay the allies in current coin, a fourth part will be lost, for they have decried the skillings (the current coin) a penny lower than hitherto it passed for. There has been a great noise of a descent on England, but all that is vanished since the news of the supplies granted by Parliament. Supposes the writer has heard before this that the French have raised the siege of Rhinfelden by order from Court after they had lain before it sixteen days. They had 1,400 men killed and wounded there and made a secure retreat to Mountroyal without leaving any cannon or artillery behind. Furness and Dixmude are fallen, however, into their hands, the fortification of which cost England 100,000, which serves to show how shortlived 'our' conquests are like to be in this war. By now the design on Dunkirk is vanished; Newport is in danger; the French continue posted in the same place and the French King is expected at Mons the latter end of this month. This is enough of all ... (the last words including probably the name of the writer have been crossed out). Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 920. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

His Lordship gave a high character of Owen and the other five ... Some information was given to the Lords of the Treasury by persons unknown to them. Having for this last winter remained in Purgatory - vulgarly called the Devil's Stink Pot - 'and now advanc'd to burgoe and bisket without a Jack expeditionall advance, ready to kill ye D(evi)l' makes bold to let Owen know that the fleet is unmoored and ready to sail the wind at N.E. 'soe pray for the soule of Gabriel John etc'. Though some of 'our dons' who seem as greedy as sharks think the French are notable to make 'us' a breakfast, the writer can but think how this poor ship of theirs was last year drubbed, killing Col. Hastings with about 150 of his men about his heels. Though he flatters himself they are going to a May game, yet longs to see a little mischief. There has been a long consultation of affairs there between the General, Admiral and Privy Council. The writer has been on board nigh three weeks, and finds it but scurvy living among some 700 persons. Besides one company, they are four regiments ordered on board, viz Lord Meath's, Sir John Morgan's late, Col. Venner's, and Col. Lloyd's, designedly to help to man the 1st and 2nd rates - all with firelocks. They are very sickly aboard. They hear by a French prize brought in this morning that 'grand Louis has nabd us upon the Rhine' and that The Count d'Estree has joined Mons. Tourville and that they are in a flourishing condition. Capt. Jones has got a new ship since he lost the Winssor Castle. PS He left amongst his papers in Ruthin a bill of £4 odd due from Lieut. William Owen. Sends him a piece of Scots law which is much applauded here. Owen's Mercuries have told Owen of declarations spread about the streets, and the writer is told that they are being spread in the country too. Much search has been made for the printer and dispersers, and two nights ago the fox was traced to Douglas's - the Scots glover's - cellar where they found printing press and some hundreds of the declarations piping hot: the writer is told that he would pass for a Quaker, and that he thought the press to be a silk stocking loom: a porter who dispersed some of them is also seized. A holiday diversion of this place was formerly to pull down bawdy houses, but of late years the weavers have been the only actors, and scarcely an Easter or Whitsuntide but they designed some reformation in the City, either a French engine or some 'Monopolizers and Ingrossers': they would be now at something and the City regiments are ordered to be ready on Monday. Rook has arrived at Kingsail with about 16 frigates and the remains of the Turkey fleet, yet there are no letters from him nor any more perfect account of the late loss. The French say they destroyed about 20 and took about 25 - most of them Dutch. But it is now too true that the English have had their share in the loss, and that the four best Turkey ships that were run into Gibraltar have since been burnt without saving much of their cargo; and a rich Dutch Smirna ship, homeward bound, happened unluckily to arrive at the same time and place and to run the same fate. The French Fleet hovered about Cadiz until the 5th/15th July and among their other exploits one it seems was to hinder the Spaniards from sending any relief to Oran while the Moors lately besieged it, but without success. On the 9th/19th Tourville is said to have sailed and joined 'd'Etree' within the Straits. Accounts are still various of the late action in Flanders: both sides extenuate their loss and seem willing to conceal the truth. The Germans are so well entrenched that the Dauphin is said to have given over the thoughts of fighting them and to have returned home. The Turks are so unsettled that they will scarce bring an army into the field this campaign which the Imperialists think to end with the siege of Belgrade or Temisware and the Duke of Savoy with that of Pignerol. Thanks Owen for his last and the invitation to meet him at Northampton. PS £24 interest is due: he will be glad to have a bill for it these hard times. Must tell Owen how a certain MP wishing to be undisturbed by his creditors during this time of non-privilege caused a gay coffin to be formally buried; but now there are affidavits of his still being above ground though one Sir William Scawen and another have spent some hundreds apiece in canvassing for his burgess-ship for which gross jest he may perhaps deserve a 'faire' expulsion. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 929. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Thomas Jones's money is due and they say ready ... Bodwillin is quite burnt because of the dry summer. The writer has had no much trouble with it that he would not take £5 to undergo another year. The following are set: Y ffridd & cae yn y mynidd £4.7.6; Cae drill y porth £1.15.0; y dday Cae yr pistill £1.5.0; house and garden £1.5.0; the meadow by Eggrin £1.3.0. Has offered Caer Lloie to Griffith Evan for 18/-, but he would not give so much for it. The writer has made use of it for his yearling calves. On 24th June at 2 pm he found in the meadow next the sea a servant of Griffith Evan of Llwyndu walking among a hundred head of sheep belonging to his master ... As for the other two meadows he has sent men to mow them from hence for he could get none about Llanaber. He made a bargain with Mr Tudder who was to find mowers for all the arable grounds that are unset and to make it into cocks and he to have a third part of the hay. Two or three fields have been done, but Tudder finding that there is not so much on the ground as will pay the mowers falls off on his bargain ... If the work had been done there was some hope of good after-grass and value for the hay and thus the old rent would have been made up before the end of the year ... On the following day, about 4 a.m., they marched, and continued very long marches for about nine days, as did the French to prevent them in two designs of which they had intelligence. By very great and extraordinary fatigue they have done so, though their army has suffered exceedingly thereby through the harrassing of their troops but they have lost many by the way in their long marches the like of which they say was hardly ever known. For his own part he has had his share of fatigue, for apart from what the whole army did, he was one among many other better deserving gentlemen upon duty a detachment of which lay a whole night in the open field. Very few had their clothes off all the nine days. He had himself one night and no more. Her son, though he had a pretty good share of it, fared much better than his father, for it was not his lot to be upon the detachment of the whole army which was commanded by the Elector of Bavaria. Thanks God that he held it better than the writer expected, but his poor horses suffered extremely for want of food and rest, for during the whole time the horses were not above four hours out of the twenty-four free from their

	loads. They are thus all fallen away exceedingly, and of seven there is not above one that is not lame or (?) saddle-galled. They are now over the river at Oudenarde which is a very fine town and through which the writer marched in such a pickle for a long beard, dirty face and more dirty linen as he never was before in his life. Col. Selwyn having by chance got before and provided a joint of mutton was so kind as to invite him to take part of it which was very welcome. But when he came into the house and casually cast his eye in a glass, he could not help being much out of countenance to find himself so very like a chimney-sweeper. They are now refreshing themselves and their horses, and truly it was high time so to do! They expect to march again every day, but where God knows! Peter has gone to hospital under the care of a serjeant. The poor young fellow was finely recovered, before the march, from his distemper. The King has given all the opportunities imaginable to the French if they had a mind to engage, and is, they say, very dissatisfied that he cannot have an opportunity of giving them battle without giving them too great advantages, there being so many strong camps in these countries that it is almost impossible to force them; besides which they have so many garrisons all along the frontiers that they can draw considerable force out of some of them 'let us move which way we will'. Three times on the campaign they have been very near battle - as the writer thought - and twice everybody in the whole army concluded that they were just going to engage. He finds that it is a matter of the greatest difficulty as well as importance to bring two great armies to engage if either side think fit to avoid it. Roger Pope is again in his old station of equerry as in the two last reigns. The post fell vacant by the death of one Mr Butler some weeks since, but not given until lately. The colic does not trouble the writer, but he has frequent pains in his joints and bones, and does not find himself as able to undergo the fatigue of campaign as he believes he would formerly have been. He wishes when the campaign is over that he could be otherwise employed. But she must be sure to keep this a secret although she may according to her best skill negotiate the matter with Mrs Godolphin. Mr Tanat's youth and strength makes him go through all with great ease, and being seasoned to his business young and to the country, he makes nothing of it. The writer wishes he could say so too! Tanat is reckoned the lustiest young fellow in the regiment, and indeed few in the army have a better constitution of body and are better qualified for the trade of a soldier. Tanat gives her his duty and sends love to his sisters. The writer sends his service to all friends. God bless the kids and send them a speedy and happy meeting. PS Has not received a letter from her or anyone else these three weeks. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 935. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Has returned that day from the upper country and proposes to give Owen an account of his affairs there. On settling accounts with several of the tenants, the writer signified Owen's pleasure to them regarding the taxes: there was discontent among them, insomuch that many of them threaten to quit their tenements. But since there is considerable inquiry for lands this year, all the vacated tenements should be set. Legal processes served on Madame Anwyl and demands for costs which she refuses to comply with alleging that she would suffer imprisonment rather than comply. Longs to hear whether Richard John ap Hugh has paid the £20 he has in his hands. If Owen has occasion for more money he can call on Richard for them. If the writer had any other way to send money he would have done it, but he is at a disadvantage since the drovers have all come home. Her Ladyship wishes to know whether he will have any frieze sent up to make him a coat for it is all provided for him if he wants it. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 937. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 938. vtls005594873 ISYSARCHB54	File - Sidney Godolphin, at Bruges, (probably to Sir Robert Owen),	1695, 13th July.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: This is the third letter he has written without a reply since his arrival in that country. Everybody complains for want of a more punctual method of correspondence. Yesterday sennight about 5am it was the writer's misfortune with three other gentlemen to fall into the hands of the French. The evening before upon their motion - some call it a retreat - from Arsell, the writer met with Major-General Churchill who, supposing it would be late before 'we came to our ground', was so kind as to invite the writer to take a little fresh hay with him in his quarters near Nevill where they arrived about 10 pm. They lay down heartily weary about 11 pm having first ordered a guard of a serjeant and twelve men from the next regiment - which was not about a half musket shot from their quarters. Early in the morning they were alarmed by a great party of French. Six of the guard of twelve were gone, either run away or asleep in the hedges or gone to the army for succour - as some pretended. So no relief came from the army, for it seems that they had marched in the night towards Ghent as did the regiment to which the guard belonged without any notice and left the writer and his friends napping. They drew off their sentries, took them into the house, shut the doors, and fired at the French out of the window which made them retire for a moment to reinforce. They endeavoured to escape by the backside of the house but were prevented by a great ditch or moat in one place; the Major-General tried another and got over a small ditch and hedge in which his Major, Mr Negus, being lame, stuck, who together with Mr Lloyd, the Major-General's aide, and the writer, perceiving that the French had almost encompassed the house, stepped into it again, when they were overjoyed to hear a drum beat a dragoon's march. Thinking there was a troop of dragoons there

	they demanded a parley and surrendered. But there was only a rude party of marauders who took away their horses, furniture, money and clothes. The writer - now separated from his friends - was made to march about an English mile as naked as when he came into the world. A charitable drummer was kind enough to lend him a lousy surtout in which he marched to the French camp. Here they were well used and shown a generous humanity. Even Major-General Dorington was civil to them. But most remarkably Lord Clancarty who conducted them to Marshal Villeroy, who likewise received them very handsomely, seemed much concerned for their ill-treatment, and told them that they were that moment free to return to their own camp. But he thought it very inhospitable to send them away until refreshed with food and rest: he ordered an apartment for them near his own quarters and invited them to supper - which Negus and the writer being but indifferently furnished with apparel, excused. But Lloyd whom they had equipped like a bridegroom went ... They were very easy in every respect except for the concern they had for the Major-General concerning whom for several hours they could have no certain account. At last they heard that several of his things were exposed for sale in the camp, viz, a ring, snuff box, watch, etc., some of which they saw and knew to be his, but no account could they have of his person. At length came an old Gascon - for so God be praised he proved - with the General's coat, and he told them that he had shot the person who owned it. What impression that made on them can be guessed. The next morning, being well refreshed, they had servants, etc., to attend them to their army. They got leave to go by Nevill to look for the Major-General's body; and just in the very field in which they last saw him and about the very place, they found one dead. But God be thanked, it was none of his; for it seems he fared much better than 'us' saving that he lost more horses - for they left him his hat, periwig, waistcoat, breeches and boots, and bid him lie still in a ditch or he would certainly be murdered: but while they were dividing the spoil, he ventured and got safe home where they found him the next day under the same concern for them ... Asks that this long and tedious account be sent to his wife, to save him the trouble of so much writing. PS Every man is so full of his own affairs that he is apt to forget what is of greater importance. It was generally supposed that the French had a design on Newport - a right Spanish garrison. But it seems they drew off towards Rouslair about the same time as their opponents moved towards Ostend. They have fatigued 'us' and themselves sufficiently of late and will no doubt continue to do so, until Namur be taken at least. How that siege goes on his correspondent has a better account than he has. Lord Athlone they hear is within the French lines .. There is a report that the French invested Dixmude yesterday about 4 pm. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 938. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 939. vtls005594874 ISYSARCHB54	File - E(dward Jones, Bishop of St) Asaph, 1696, 9th October. at St Asaph, to Sir Robert Owen at Porkington, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Owen's letter reached him as he was about to go abroad. He will consider its contents when he returns to Montgomeryshire which he hopes to do at the beginning of the following month. Clenennau letters and papers 940. vtls005594875 ISYSARCHB54	File - Elizabeth Wynne to Lady Owen at 1696/7, 12th Porkington, February.

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: She makes bold to write because this letter may probably be the last Lady Owen will receive from the writer in the hope that it will come into Lady Owen's hands in the event of her death. Begs her to help her child and to take him into her upright and tender concern. In case he dies she leaves Lady Owen what she has ... since the latter has been constant to her in preserving it. And if her husband will be advised by Lady Owen, the writer begs her to adjust the matter between him and Cousin Robert Wynne who has had the last farthing which has been set down (in an accompanying note missing). She suspects that Wynne will not squarely allow the account since he refused to give acquittances on stamp paper ... What she had was given with much ado with none to testify it, and it was made by Cousin Robert Lloyd of Llangowled ... It would trouble the writer in her grave if her husband or child were pinched too hard on this account, or Lady Owen with his impertinency. Hopes she will direct her husband in all that concerns him while he remains unmarried or her child or children live, for she hopes her husband will consider his own good and know that none will deal more justly with him and his children than Lady Owen. Provision for the clothing and dieting of her mother ... Begs Lady Owen to make all the shift she can to understand the meaning of the letter and not to let the trouble she has had with the writer be a stop to neglect this last (trouble). Prays for Lady Owen, Sir Robert, Mistress Ellen and Mistress Jane and the whole family. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 940. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 941. vtls005594876 ISYSARCHB54	File - Edw(ard) Lhwyd, at Oxford, to Sir Robert Owen,	1696/7, 26th February. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Mr Thomas, the bearer, acquaints the writer that he has troubled Owen with a parcel of the queries towards the writer's undertaking. This comes to beg Owen's recommendation of them throughout any part of North Wales as occasion is offered as well as in the borders of Shropshire. He knows that they will not be wholly neglected where they come so well recommended, though in many other places he fears little regard will be had of them. He has already dispersed them as far as his acquaintance extends, and has particularly sent some to the Vicar of Oswestry. But if Owen happens to direct some to the same hands, they will be very well disposed of. He would gladly if possible see a catalogue of Sir William Williams's manuscripts - but perhaps there is none taken. He hopes, however, 'through your means' to have the perusal of the study when he comes to those parts, if not the favour of some particular book in the interim. Mr V(aughan) of Aber Frydlon was pleased to promise him the use at Oxford of three or four manuscripts this winter, but, on what occasion the writer knows not, he has since changed his resolution, but promises free access to them when Lhwyd comes to Merionethshire. They were only a set of 'our oldest poets' of little use but upon this occasion, and that only as they mention many places and persons to be inserted in the Dictionary. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers 941. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 942. vtls005594877 ISYSARCHB54	File - O(wen) Wynne to Sir Robert Owen, MP, at Porkington,	1697, 15th April. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: His last letter about Lod. Lloyd was written in haste. The writer has since inquired into his case and finds strong reason to suspect him guilty of more than he would own to the writer. The latter went to Newgate

	a second time and put some hints and queries to him which much startled him or rather stunned him, and let him see the danger he was in of being betrayed out of his life by his companion, who is an old offender, and with whom he has associated these seven years and who would have hanged him if he could have been heard first. At last he resolved to be 'ingenious' and to tell all. The Warden of the Mint and Alderman Levet being prepared to receive his confession, he doubled so with them and is so case-hardened as to throw away his life. Mr Bulkeley has written on his behalf. The writer hopes he will make good use of the small time left him. His companion is found guilty of high treason by the grand jury and will be tried tomorrow, and if (Lloyd) be not free in his evidence he must be tried soon after. Is sorry to give no better account of him. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 942. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 943. vtls005594878 ISYSARCHB54	File - E(dward) Lhwyd, at Usk, to Sir Robert Owen at Porkington, 1697, 14th June. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: It was some time ere Owen's letter found the writer out, and being on the ramble it is not often that they come to a town whence they may write. Thanks for the letter and all other favours. Since he has no other acquaintance left in Owen's neighbourhood, must beg Owen's further trouble of ordering some person to receive the several sums Owen's friends have been pleased to subscribe. He desires that the money be directed to Mr. William Williams at the Museum at Oxford, who will give the carrier a receipt for it, for the writer's use. If the sum might be conveyed to Mr. John Lloyd of Gwersyllt, he might easily send it to Oxford either by the Wrexham or Anglesey carrier. The writer has had tolerable success since he came to Monmouthshire; but the Welsh names of places are so disguised all along the River Wye that many of them are irretrievable. They find Roman coins in all the old towns of Gobannium, Burrium, Isca Legionum, etc., and Venta Silurum, besides several other places not mentioned in the Itinerary or Notitia Provinciarum. But in all his travels hitherto the writer has never seen a coin of any Prince of Wales, and he fears that Camden has too truly asserted in his remains that they never coined any, to which Mr. Nicolson, the present Archdeacon of Carlisle, adds that those called by Camden, Speed, etc., British coins were not really so, but old amulets, etc. Has found no inscriptions of any noted antiquity in the county except those sent to Mr. Camden by Bishop Godwin, which were somewhat erroneously transcribed. Must repeat his request to Owen of recommending the Queries among the gentry and clergy throughout North Wales - particularly those relating to the geography and antiquities, and amongst them only such as may be easily answered from each parish. Where he has had acquaintance in Monmouthshire, they have done well enough, but finds that his account of the other places will be very deficient. Has found considerable materials towards the Natural History, such as divers sorts of fish teeth in the limestone on top of Blorens, the highest hill in the county except one called the Vale, corruptly for Y Voel, some mineral waters, etc. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 943. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Clenennau letters and papers 945. vtls005594880 ISYSARCHB54	File - Ellis Wynne, at Lâs Ynys, to (Sir Robert Owen), 1697, 16th September. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Has been encouraged chiefly by Owen's well-known good nature to trouble him with this tedious scribble and presumptuous request. The writer's uncle, John Jones of Uwch law'r Coed, a person well known to Owen and who the writer is sure respects him very much, has a considerable estate, part in Merioneth and part out, but is indebted almost to the value of a third part of it, which debt to discharge he was lately upon selling the third part of it, but now missing of that he is upon mortgaging the whole. Being somewhat flexible and wavering in his temper, though otherwise very honest and innocent, several persons are at him, each for his own ends, some for a perfect sale of all his estate others promising great matters for the reversion of it, so that between insinuation and a seeming recesseit it is to be feared he will be brought to dispose of it otherwise than in justice he ought. The writer is the undoubted heir-at-law and is grieved to see the estate in such needless distress, and that sincerely, for his uncle's sake as well as his own. The writer has offered to pay off the debt in return for present possession of what he designed to sell and for the reversion of the rest. His uncle seems to approve of the proposal, but the agreement may easily miscarry for want of good mediation ... and this being a concern of £300 per annum - the most important occasion the writer is ever likely to have - he thinks it not amiss to use his best tools. Believing Owen to be his best friend, he desires him to be his advocate in this affair. If Owen would desire oral conference with the writer's uncle, a message to Bryn y Phynnon in Wrexham would bring him to Porkington or elsewhere. He will not pretend to lesson or instruct Owen how to deal with his uncle, but begs of him that, if further inquiry and consideration shall give Owen a good opinion of the writer and the latter's proposal, Owen will not only recommend both to his uncle but also make the latter promise by word or writing that he will make an agreement, or at least make none with anybody else to the writer's prejudice and so pass his estate from the right line. To apologise for his troublesomeness would be but more troublesome to Owen. Wishes him all prosperity at home and abroad, and prays that God will make him an instrument of much good not only to his private relations but to the country in general and to his own glory. Obligated kinsman. PS If the writer's uncle will be come to Merioneth by the time Owen is at Porkington, begs him to send a letter speedily to Uwch law'r Coed. But the news of the peace - as it's now jumbled together - is as effectual a prevention of her mirth and nonsense as the malt tax is of guzzling good fellowship, and however glad she is that sighs - an instrument she often plays upon - or cannot be conveyed in a letter,

	and good humour she is no more master of than good sense. Sir Robert is well - very well - and looks as well or rather better than ever. Her Ladyship's pretty little one is in extraordinary health. Miss Betty has drawn a picture which pleased Sir Robert. They are to fall very hard to their French tomorrow. Madame Ellen - who asked the writer to send to her Ladyship - and Madame Jane are well. Mr. Fowles is at Gwersyllt or Chester: Mr. Willcox has gone to bed with a sprinkling of the gout. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Mr Anwyl expressed true affection for Owen in private conversation with the writer. The writer hopes that Anwyl will be just to Owen in making him a remainder in his intended settlement. Anwyl, being earnest to know why Owen thought he would be left out, was told that Owen might have heard that his grandmother - Owen's aunt - advised him to do so ... Anwyl has, however, agreed to recognize in the settlement Owen's right as heir-at-law to the remainder in default of issue to Anwyl or his cousins, Mr Owen Anwyl's day. But the writer does not know whether Anwyl is a person of resolution, and can only hope that he is of the stamp of Owen himself. Has not yet had an opportunity to discourse Mr Vaughan. The latter's brother-in-law the writer's neighbour - was always at hand, who, the writer fears, will obstruct Owen's just right ... for he affirms he has the sole right of fishing to the harbour's mouth. The writer will do all he can to serve Owen in the matter. Owen should write to Cousin William Wynne of Wern asking him to discourse the matter with Mr Vaughan, but the letter should be such as could be produced to Vaughan. PS Mr Anwyl is now in Pembroke with his wife or at his father-in-law's house. The writer fears that they will mould him up there to settle as they please. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 947. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	The writer's disorder of mind and body is great with grief ... she can scarce think with any patience or intermission from pointed sorrow ... what they have all lost is hardly to be expressed ... Sir Robert's kindness perpetually appears before her, and very signal it was to her, since it was proof against the daily undermining of brutish lying detraction which likewise had too great a share in the undermining of his health. The writer is vexed with herself that she did not venture his displeasure in importuning him to send for physicians sooner. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 952. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Hopes Owen will come to St Asaph, not as a stranger, but to stay with him as long as he can find how to bestow his time in this country. Would not have him come until Lent is over unless Owen has a mind to do penance with the Bishop. As to the school at Oswestry the writer is willing to do what Owen desires as soon as he has opportunity - that is as soon as he can find a living for Mr Evans which he is fit for and will accept. These conditions are put in because Wrexham is now in the Bishop's hands; but Evans is, the Bishop believes, so wise that he would not accept it if it were offered to him; so if he did accept it the Bishop would not consider him wise enough to be fit for it. He has nothing to say for Mr Owen who has almost worn out the Bishop's patience, which when he has quite done the Bishop will handle him in his own way - 'that is I shall do the part of a poor British Bishop which is all I can pretend to'. The Bishop is far from assuming papal power to dispense with men for not keeping their oaths, as he is afraid that those who have sworn to do justice allow Mr Owen and such as he is to live in open breach of law without punishment. Sir Robert Owen the writer knows will not suffer it when he has time to look after him. But Sir Robert will do well to warn before striking, like a Christian and a gentleman. If he can prefer Mr Evans he will think of none other for the school until Mr Gr., mentioned by Sir Robert, has refused it. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 960. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 961. vtls005594896 ISYSARCHB54	File - W(illiam Lloyd Bishop of St) Asaph [c.1682]. to Sir Robert Owen at Clennau, Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:

	Owen has asked him whether he can with a good conscience take the oath required of him on the occasion of a treaty of marriage since matters of conscience properly belong to men of the Bishop's function ... Thinks it is not safe to take such an oath, for Owen may be ensnared with it before he is aware. The writer has not many debts himself but believes they are more than he can call to mind. But if Owen is put to swear - as near as he can tell - how much will pay his debts, he may without danger of sin take such an oath with that limitation, always provided that the oath is administered by one with authority to do it. So much for the conscientious part: as to the prudence of taking such an oath the writer cannot judge without knowing more of the circumstances. The same thing that in some circumstances may be stark naught, in others may happen to be very advisable. It were an odd thing to bid a merchant throw his goods into the sea, and yet it would be the most prudent thing that he could do in case of storm. Is Owen desperately in love and cannot endure to live without this lady? And is she not to be obtained without such an oath? If this be the case the Bishop need not tell Owen what to do. But in all the cases he has known - and he has been at pretty many treaties of marriage - he has never known such an oath required in his life. He has never heard such a thing mentioned. But if the Bishop were to advise any friends about to treat with another, he would wish them to consider well before they made such an oath a condition of marriage. For as the world now goes there are few young men who would take it without chewing. And what would the advantage be to her upon whose account it was required? ... It would never secure any woman from a bad husband, though it might hinder her from a good one. Wishes that those Owen treats with knew him as well as the writer does, and then they would not insist on the oath. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 961. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

He must confess that such amazing news daily arrives there that until time clears things up he is content to sit in the dark. He has made an excursion this last fortnight into Brabant and some part of Flanders. At Brussels he made some stay and chanced to be at the Duke of York's court just as letters arrived which brought the astonishing news of the vote that had passed concerning the succession, etc. The Duke has taken that house to live in which his brother the King of England had in his exile - the villa Hermosa -, it being the place of residence of the Governor of the Low Countries ... It is hard as it now goes with the writer. His sickness has cost him above £30 and his good mother sent him 40/- for it. His brother is the greatest rascal imaginable. As Owen's obligations to him are of the highest nature so shall the writer's gratitude be proportionably great as long as he breathes. He could run on for ever about the matter. But as he writes from Cambridge he must acquaint Owen how he came there. Having some dependence on the Burlington family they have sent him down to Lord Hinghambrook in order to travel two years with him. They have pretty good appointments and as times go it is one of the best employments, for though they are not to live in the greatest splendour the writer will at least be in credit and out of want. Besides it may be of good consequence to him since it turns not out of the way of physic. For the present he is there at a better certainty though not without plague enough and he expects more with 'him' abroad. Owen knows his father, the Earl of Sandwich, is whimsical and this is his heir way. But bread must be laboured for and the writer has already suffered so much that he would fain be a little at ease. Is satisfied to hear things related of Owen are in every way to his reputation. The writer is prepared to be serviceable to Owen on this side or beyond the seas. Hopes he will not be long there before going to Italy with his 'cub'. Asks to know how happy Owen is in his domestic enjoyments. Acknowledges Owen's kind letter. The writer is troubled to hear that Owen's letters are opened: this last came sealed with a large wafer, the impression being the crest of a coat-of-arms - a lion rampant regardant. He has had two other letters - one directing him to speak with Mr Kynaston of Oatley, the other dated at Teddington: if Owen vouchsafed him any more he lost the benefit of them. He has no news to impart except that Mr Major of Oswestry brought him under a necessity of correcting him. The writer excommunicated him and he came at length for absolution, and upon his submission and promise to give public satisfaction for the affront to the jurisdiction, he received it upon his knees in open court and accepted a schedule of moderate penance ... It cost him about 20/- though the writer abated him all his fees. If he had stood out a while longer the writer would have put him to an expense of £10 or £12. The writer has not given his Lordship any account of this yet. He will do it at large as soon as he can get the schedule certified. This has made some noise in the country which does no hurt to the jurisdiction. Received a letter this day from Mr William Owen. They are all well at Porkington. Mr Thelwall can serve Owen no further than by drawing a bill or answer and giving you an account of what conveyances were executed by the father-in-law. But Sir John is well heard at all bars, and the writer would not have him against Owen. But tua res agitur - the writer only proposes it. Their friend the Doctor who has paid off several debts is still uneasy under the college obligation. He says that Owen was generously pleased to promise to be bound for a sum of money which he is confident he will pay off in two years. If Owen is still of the same kind intention, the writer can get the money. But he would not dare propose Owen as security until he had it from himself. The writer need say no more to the Doctor's pupil for whom the Doctor has the greatest honour of all men living. PS If Owen will engage for £100 he will make him a clear man. The writer does as much consideratis considerandis. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 976. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The persons who informed her gave her this further advice that she should endeavour to make an interest betimes in Sir William Whitmore for the writer, which they thought not unlikely to take, the Doctor coming in on fewer recommendations than might be provided for the writer. They said that few men were dearer to Sir William than Sir Richard Middleton, and none more entirely intimate, the writer knows, than Sir Richard and Owen himself. Asks Owen to urge the writer's interest warmly to Sir Richard he cannot doubt but he will be able to gain a promise for the writer, provided Sir William be unengaged, which the writer understands he is upon young Mr Weld's

	refusal now to take orders. They imagine at the Corn Market that Owen's so strict a friendship with Sir Richard Middleton may persuade the latter to press it so that it will not be easy for Sir William to deny. Clenennau letters and papers 979. vtls005594915 ISYSARCHB54	File - Jo(hn) Godolphin, at Astrop, to Mrs Mary Tanat. Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: Whatever planet reigned at his son's nativity, the writer and his son are fortunate in Mrs Tanat's acquaintance. If a compliance with her demands by Mr Ellis be not feasible, it shall be imputed rather to a weakness of the writer's understanding rather than to the least unreasonableness in her proposals. At the same time to comply with your demands requires an estate of little less than £35,000. She requires him to buy two-thirds of the lands and woods - about £13,000; to settle £700 per annum on his son where his estate lies - £14,000; to buy two-thirds of the personal estate - about £1,000; and to maintain himself and his other son he cannot proportionably be allowed an estate of less than £7,000; a total of £35,000. He is unwilling to call her experience in question by asking her if she knows of a precedent in which

	one was obliged to buy two-thirds of an estate in order to obtain the other third in marriage ... Reason itself cannot be more rational than that she and her sister should secure themselves not only a comfortable well-being, but also a being equal at least to the happiness Providence has already blessed you with. And although Mrs Tanat's goodness and sweetness of nature guides her to no greater temporal prospect than the prosperity of her dear sister, yet there lies no obligation upon Mrs Tanat why she may not expatiate her prospect, for they are large limits that are confined only to the pleasure of 'our' wills. He would be uncivil if he should think she could not get more for the wood and land from her neighbours, but he is sure she will grant him the right to say that there are circumstances in this case besides many neighbours which turn the scale - for there is loyalty to the family and the memory of her ancestors ... Should his son fall sacrifice to her sister, the writer would follow him to the altar and if he could not live there as her happy relation, then he would die there as her most obsequious votary. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 979. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Heartiest thanks for courtesies and entertainment. As for the writer's father, does not know his resolution regarding the matter discussed between him and Wynne. The writer for his part would like the matter to be determined as soon as possible. His father's slackness is such that the writer perceives not what he means to do, for he is so negligent of his estate and theirs. The writer can therefore but lament this obstinacy and the writer's own hard fortune. Asks Wynne to write to his father to know his resolution. Clenennau letters and papers 982. vtls005594918 ISYSARCHB54	File - Will(iam) Griffith, at Caernarvon, to Sir John Owen, kt, at Clennau. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:

	The writer has with much difficulty stayed Owen's trusty old servant, Morrice Griffith, thus long in town, being impatient to make so long a stop where there is usually so much good fellowship. Hopes Owen will excuse his servant. The writer asks pardon for having been so bold as to add Owen's name to a letter written by Mr Bulkeley and the writer in answer to Mr Secretary Bennett's letter a copy whereof is kept for Owen's perusal in town, having no time to transcribe the same at present. The substance thereof is that they returned a written letter of John Williams to his Honour that he may be pleased personally to compare the said letter with the late intercepted (letter) which the writer and Bulkeley still believe to be his, all circumstances therein making it out very apparent. They examined Morrice Griffith, Jeffry Parry, and Marke Lloyd, interrogating them severally whether they knew the handwriting which was sent by Mr Secretary. All of them upon oath declared that they did not believe that written paper to be the hand of John Williams, and indeed none that knows his handwriting very well can imagine it to be so, because his guilt did direct him to alter his usual and common character lest it should be too near to the intercepted letter. Cousin Bulkely and the writer did parole the prisoners until the Quarter Sessions which will be the 12th of next month at Caernarvon where he hopes Owen will be to resolve further thereon and to settle other public affairs. They further humbly submitted the consideration of Edwards and Williams to his Honour's wisdom, they themselves being verily persuaded that Edwards full well knows the author, adding thereunto their innocence as touching any of the least spleen and malice in us concerning them as they cunningly give out, but that only their zeal, duty and loyalty encouraged them to hasten to his Honour what were discovered to be practised among such dangerous nonconformists. Acknowledges Owen's letter and is sorry that Owen lays that command aside. And since the writer finds others intent upon that employment, he shall readily comply with them, they being far better able to undergo the public care and expense thereof than the writer. Indeed it is more that time for the writer to learn that prudent lesson not to struggle for that which brings no other advantages with it but expenses and charges. Is informed that a little boat of less than a ton came lately to porth Nygull in Llyne, which is laid up and preserved. The writer would like to have it as it may be fully valued: it may be of some service to him. But does not press the request if Owen's own proper occasions may make use of it. What Owen may be pleased to do therein, his order to Cousin William Spicer will be observed. Respects to Lady Owen and his pretty cousin Nelly. The moneys are to the full paid to Owen's servant Morrice Griffith. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 982. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Hatfeild to Sir John Owen, kt, at Clennau. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Sends a receipt from Platt - the money discharged by Owen's noble friend Mr Broughton according to promise. But for Owen's setting dog, after six or seven messages, no other answer but he will himself come over and bring him with him sometime this next week. These parts afford to news worthy of relation. If the western wind blows any into Owen's country might your times express it at this postillion's return. It were but too great an honour for 'us' who have heard of great fighting by sea and battles by land, but cannot afford credit to such hyper. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: She knows her correspondent longs to hear that this troublesome commission is at an end late last night. Their commissioners say that they are much the better side though Robert Ellis brags hard and brought all the country in as witnesses. Pray acquaint 'my Lady' that the depositions are delivered to Mr Meirig by consent to have them copied if both parties agree, to save charges of either side to have them copied instead of copying the records, which will come to a great deal. So that Sir Robert must send to the Colonel to know whether he would have them copies. If not, her ladyship must speak to Mr John Edwards to have them copied of the records in London and bring them down with him and the writer will pay for them. Edwards can be found at the Sugar Loaf in Chancery Lane. The Bishop and Dean must be solicited to make an end by letters or to meet and make an end by Candlemas, for the order of the court is that there must be an end put to it before that time. A choice buck was accordingly presented to his Lady in Lady Owen's name with a letter as from her, a copy of which Owen will receive from Mr Roberts. How well it was resented Owen will find by the letter from her Ladyship. The writer will not trouble Owen about the 'hobbie' horse since Bartholomew Fair is so near, where he may be furnished with one that may carry him to the King's Head Tavern, Bell Yard, and Hercules Pillars, and if not he is resolved to go on foot. The £100 that was in Lent expected, the writer has at last a bill of exchange to receive it. He has been studying how to put the question to Mr Lloyd. Does Owen consider the following a proper form: Sir Robert Owen finds himself aggrieved in the payment of heriots and desires to know by what right or custom Mr Lloyd entitles himself to excessive heriots within the lordship of Whittington, since the customs of Whittington were originally the same as those of Oswestry at this day. The writer adds that there was a long chancery suit about 80 years ago between the freeholders of Oswestry and the Earl of Suffolk touching a similar matter ... Sir John Trevor has all the proceedings between the Earl of Suffolk and the freeholders of Oswestry. The writer proposes to study copies thereof which a gentleman in this country has. Asks them to meet there on Thursday next. The writer, however, may not be at home since he plans on Wednesday to go to Worcester and to return before the next county day. Doubt thereof arose from the delay in Owen's answer. But now he is in good hopes that there will be speedily an absolute end of all such cares and charges about this affair, to the accomplishment whereof the writer had made some hopeful progress at this time by a return of his demands, if he had clearly understood by Owen's last letter whether the freeholders' mind still (to) continue to compound with the writer and his partner together, as was expressed in Owen's first letter, or only with Owen himself, as the writer conjectures from the words of Owen's last letter. He desires to deal squarely with his partner whose interest in law is equal to his own, though there may be some very good reason in equity as well as prudence for a better recompense by way of composition to be given to one than to another. To give satisfaction to them both will be the surest way of preventing future troubles. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 992. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Is sorry to hear that Owen's interest with the late Treasurer has hindered his preferment 'att concell table': they doubt not, however, but that Owen's merit will be taken notice of in time. He has got thus far on his way there. Lord Cholmondeley and Mr Kynaston will be at Lichfield with the writer on Monday night and on Tuesday they begin their journey for London. 	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Dear Janny. Is glad to know that her daughter likes her place: she has received Janny's safeguard from Abertanat: her father has been there to welcome them home and to give thanks on her behalf. Prays her good child to serve God and to make that her daily study and then God will instruct in all things. Wants to know how her daughter has been since Aunt Tanat came home and how they use her there. An account of the £20 has been received, but not of the £6 her father gave towards her charges. If Aunt Tanat paid for her, she can have the £6 to keep in her purse to buy other small things until her father can send her more. She has sent no news of the Court nor what welcome her aunts gave her. If they make much of her, she is to go there as often as she can. She must not expect to hear often from her mother because of her little brother, and her mother's frequent infirmity. Wants to hear from her every week. She is to read as much as she can that she may learn to spell well. Her brother is at Wrexham and her sister is at home. Her brother expects a letter from her by every post. Does not know how to send the book for fear of miscarriage. Services to her aunts and to cousin Francis Lloyd. She is to go to the King's Chapel as often as she can have good company to go along with her. Her sister Ellen and cousin Glynne have been in Llanddyn but are now gone to Porkington and Abertanat. Beseeching God to bless her and to make her His faithful servant to His Glory and her mother's comfort. But on the 14th of this month Mr Owen Annwyl and one Mr Carreg, his agent, sat there alleging that Sir Robert had no title therein. So last sabbath the writer and Owen Humffrey repaired there betimes and possessed the seats. But before service was over Mr Carreg came to the church and having commanded the officiating parson to 'appease' awhile, wished the writer and Humffrey to remove themselves from the seats which were Mr Owen Annwyl's. The writer asserted Sir Robert's legal right. But at length after long strife and contention, Mr Richard Humffreys and Mr Jeremy Edwards having endeavoured to reconcile them, the writer forced his antagonist to 'retrograde', a full account of which Lady Owen will receive when he comes to Porkington. The writer was once molested by parson Williams, but the writer suppressed him with convincing arguments so that his mouth was stopped. A proclamation and licence had been promised him to he read on the last sabbath, but he was disappointed by Owen Griffith, the Bishop's man. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1010. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Hopes this will find him in North Wales though it is reported that Owen has gone fishing in Ireland. What colour they have for it she cannot guess since he last hinted of designs nearer at hand, to which she wishes success or his speedy return, for Barbour with his man and two horses have taken up their quarters at Porkington. This she would have forbidden if she had encouragement from Owen, for truly Barbour's company is so disagreeable and of so little credit that she and her sister think themselves under a confinement when he is with them. How far they can be censured for entertaining him they know not: most will conclude, she fears, that he is there on account of the writer's making use of him. What is she to do in the matter for the suspense makes her uneasy? She has paid Godolphin who was at Porkington that day when he talked of looking for Owen amongst the hills, imagining that Owen is on a close pursuit and therefore cannot return before Godolphin leaves for Cornwall. The Bishop of St Asaph and the Vicar of Oswestry are dead. Dr Davies seeks for Oswestry and many more. Owen's box from London went to cousin Godolphin by mistake, otherwise it would have been sent to Owen sooner by the bearer. Ned Hughes is kept for the harvest, and Roger when he comes shall look to Owen's horse. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1012. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

But her sister has written asking the writer to remind Owen to do Davies what service he can. Owen knows his design but they could hardly guess at his method because of his way of writing. All are well there and in the neighbourhood. Powys Castle is reduced to such a condition as some of the lewd houses of London, and the park and pond destroyed: Sir John Morgan had a brace of fat bucks sent him from thence by one Hill in that neighbourhood. Cousin Ellis Wynne has returned and wants Owen very much at home. They heard from him that Ch. H. has fought Owen Vaughan - for fringed gloves which he snatched from him - and wounded him of which he lies ill at Alderleys. There has been some fighting and hurt done between the papists and protestants in Pool. Her sister has paid Owen's 'pole' £10.0.0. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1013. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
Clenennau letters and papers 1014. vtls005594950 ISYSARCHB54	File - Ellen Owen to her brother Sir Robert Owen at Glyn, [1685]. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: She is truly glad that Owen has made no application for the membership and would rejoice more should he declare his desire to live at home in peace and quietness: that would avoid expenses so that he could then satisfy necessary occasions which are in a perplexed posture and need much patience and frugality to bring into a right state. If he does not so do she cannot give him a prospect of tranquillity. The clamorous demands that daily arrive there will not be silenced without that effectual remedy. Her sister Owen has done very kind things for Owen's case, which to name were needless and since not regarded must breed an uneasiness which only Owen has power to allay. She dares to say that Owen could remove it if he be pleased with a just sense of his condition, consulting each other with methods

	which may be conducive to making it easy for both and their children whose education and provision is a concern that requires the utmost care. The writer finds fear to be wanting, but when a prospect of that can be shown Owen can be assured of the peace he looks for - no love being wanting on her sister's side or condescension to live below what her very ample fortune might modestly challenge and which would become Owen to provide for her as a gentleman and an honest man. Owen's shoes and waistcoat have been sent. Mr Evans must send the key of the press which was unhinged to take them out of it. Owen's horse is poor and weak. There is inquiry for pasture which wants setting which cannot be done without Owen's approbation. PS If her brother does not wear the frieze coat now he is to return it. He is to give cousin Wynne notice when he returns and allow Mr Evans to set out the day before so that he may be the same night at Bala to attend Owen. Of the fish, the writer disposed of one to her uncle Baudenine and her cousin Mostyn; one of the least to Pentre Kenryck; one less Tomkins had; they potted six, which piece of housewifery she is afraid Lady Owen will not much approve of - though cousin Mostyn was sparing of the spices. Such a quantity of butter was used that the writer is willing to repay it - it was weighed - if Lady Owen thinks it was ill disposed of. Her brother being away from home they knew not what to do with them. They reserved the two largest until he came which he ordered to be boiled. He wants his clothes out of the press and the writer is afraid he intends to go to London. He opened the letter from Mr Groves without the writer's entreaty. They hear nothing of her brother Lewis nor of those five regiments designed to embark at Plymouth for Ireland. She wonders if they are not stopped for the security of the kingdom. The travelling case, the large pears and the rest of the mince pies with the paper of sweet-meats her brother had at Pentre Pant, though he was not called up to see the child christened to spare giving money. She has received the £30 very seasonably as it happened. She has made another cake which she fears may be bitter, being their own yeast, that from town having failed in the last: the fruit and spices are her own which is the only amends she can make for its faults. Cousin William Glyn's talk - of coming to fetch the writer is for no good designed her: either he thinks she does but feign a desire to see her aunt Jones, or may perish in the attempt of coming to spare a legacy: thinks his malice is arrived at the height, all sides having failed him, cousin D. L. having gone who was the only person these days who could suit his politics in her opinion. Tom Baudenine has a good and handsome wit and Bess Hill a very good husband. Of Mr Herbert, whom her brother saw on his return from the funeral, she has no more news. Betty breaks out on the belly and thighs but is very hearty as also is her brother. She cannot go to see them for herself for the weather has been very bad since Lady Owen arrived at Glyn. Cousin Mostyn complains of her stomach and tomorrow will use the syrup Lady Owen has sent her. Her brother has bought six lemons which will be sent to Lady Owen. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1015. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Sir John Owen, at Clennau, to his brother William Owen. Received his brother's (letter) last night, but could not return the bearer - who had to wait until this evening - by the same tide. Sends £30 with him to be paid to Mr Gabriel Edwards, which Owen hopes he will return to his brother in London upon sight ... The last time he wrote he was so troubled in body and mind that he could not tell what he was to do. He had such anguish and pain and in mind was so much troubled because Mr Hill could not send sooner notice to Mr Smyth. There is no more for his brother to do but to take care whom he will have for counsel. Mr Trevor must be one. Mr Glynne when he last moved for Owen did very well so the writer was informed. Owen thinks it will be convenient that Mr Attorney General should be one if he can come. But leaves it to his brother's judgment to do what he pleases. Is not yet satisfied with Mr Houlden's proceedings in the Arches else he could not have gone on in Chancery. It seems he sticks to the old administration. Has written to her divers times, but doubting of the receipt, since she sent him no answer, he once more ventures to write and to tell her of the misfortune he had before Bristol where he was unfortunately shot through the right side of his nose, out under the left ear, through all the jugular veins and mouth, and did bleed extremely so that everybody thought he had been choked. But good God be praised he is in pretty good state if it does not turn into a fever. Hopes to recover his bodily health shortly, but his wound will be long. Her son has put him unto charge for he has seldom been well since he came thither to Owen. 'I have nothine to send unto thee nor thy daughters for I cannot stirr abroad.' The King coming yesterday to Bristol and passing by the army and seeing Owen's colours asked Prince Rupert whose they were, who answered that they were Owen's: the King turned his horse suddenly and called to one of Owen's officers who came to him. 'I hope in God your Colonel is not dead': 'Noe and please your Majesty he is some thinge dangirously hurte': 'I praise God for his life and desir is recoverie'. This was spoken before all the court and army which is sufficient for any soldier and a great favour from a king in the field. 'Before Owen left Oxford the King gave him the place of Vice-Admiral of North Wales and it carried in spite of all opposition. Dear heart 'fare thee well'. PS Services to his cousins of Brynkir, Stymlyn and Wern, and all about: to Mr Ellice, Griffith Ellice, Robert ap Rees, Ellice Maurice and Braich y Bib, and they of Trevan. Owen believes that Byron knows partly how it stands. Owen is sure that nothing has been paid and no provision brought in but what the writer has paid for out of his own purse. He confesses he made bold of some of his Lord Grace's provision and most of it was spoilt before Owen had it. Byron knows what time of the year he had the cattle when there was neither old nor new victuals to be had. If it please God that Owen may have some time fitting to make preparation for the victualling, he will out of his small maintenance furnish it for six months without being beholden to any man. His Lordship knows how backward they are in paying the contribution agreed on at Denbigh unto his Honour: much more to the garrison. 'Many faults may be laid but I am sure their was much very earnestly desired from the comitions to doe from time to time as might be, yett nothings donne. I beseech your honour to hould a good opinion of him that is reale and wholly devoted to sacrifice live and fortune for his Majesty'. PS He is desired to give testimony of the bearer. For many a year Owen had nothing more in his wishes than some good occasion of seeing those parts whereby he might gain the advantage of renewing that happy converse and friendship they had so long since contracted. He has come thus far, but is not allowed the great enjoyment he so long courted and so often promised himself. His restraint, he is certain, is not unknown to his correspondent, and that it is upon no score of guilt, but a general thing wherein many innocents besides are concerned, else Owen would not have ventured on this address lest his correspondent might have apprehended danger in the receipt. They are all obliged to the Governor's civilities, who allows them what liberty they can reasonably desire. Owen presumes upon a very great boldness in reminding his correspondent of a former promise, often and very seriously made, that Owen should command a buck whenever he came to Cheshire. The manner of his coming cannot, he hopes, weaken the intended obligation. Owen would not have pressed him to the performance but that they are there forced to solace one another, thereby to lessen the thoughts of their confinements. Through Owen he will by this favour oblige many gentlemen who sharing of his bounty will join in frequent remembrance of him. Owen has so great a zeal for the preservation of ancient friendship that he will be afflicted until he has some happy overtures of gaining signal testimonies. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1024. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Friday was a day of trial. The Bishops of St Asaph, Ely, Peterborough, Bristol, Bath and Wells, and Chichester petitioned the King to be dispensed from reading his declaration. They said they were not averse to it for want of tenderness to dissenters in favour of whom they would come to such temper as might be agreed on in Parliament and Convocation. But this dispensing power might lead at any time to the setting aside of all laws. The declaration appears to them as it did to the Parliament of '72 to be illegal, and they could not make themselves so far a party to it as to read it in church. The King is said to have answered that they might refuse to read the Declaration but that he would find himself ways to be obeyed. Parliament is to meet the 15th January. All Catholics are to be out of commission. Commissioners are to be sent to treat with the Prince of Orange - some bishops and some temporals: Canterbury, Winchester, Ely, Halifax, Nottingham, Middleton, Preston, Godolphin or some of them. As the Earl of Danby took York, so the Earl of Bath has seized his own government of Plymouth and therein imprisoned the Earl of Huntingdon. The six regiments are sent for from Holland. The writer hopes to get Mr Lewis a post in one of them. The trunk of a man was found three nights ago near Queen's St, and his arms, legs and thighs next day thrown out of the Savoy into the Thames: his head is missing: no one knows who he is. This and minatory letter's sent to six or seven Protestant noblemen make great noise. PS Mr David Morris's business. The writer encloses his account to Owen being an itemised account totalling £45.8.0. This includes £6.10.0 for two pieces of gadian silk at £3.5.0 each; for spectacles with gold frames, glasses and case £1.12.0; mending Owen's watch and a new key 10/-. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 1050. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

If so, Owen will have had the news, for bad news is generally winged enough. When are the Flint Assizes? Ned Mostyn says that he is for the country very speedily. The affairs at Rome are not yet accommodated. The old man seems resolute and says he would rather resign than prejudice the rights of the Church. The town will have it that 'Hogen would be Mogen' and meditate mischief against us, but, though they may wish well, their horns are short. They may have North Holland wind, but the writer hopes that 'we' have as many ships as they. Soldiers who have gone away will not be 'our countrymen' according to a doctrine they have set on foot that a subject taking service under a former prince loses his allegiance without allowing any local allegiance. 	They have been blocked with deep snow since Owen left them. Hopes Owen is not under an embargo on the same account. The writer has never known the snow to be so deep or the weather so cold. Owen's letter was delivered by Cpt. Wynne. Is sorry that Owen left them so soon: had he stayed one week longer he would have had Harlech. The Earl of Nottingham who passed the last grant cannot meddle in Owen's. The other Secretary is named to be Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and since Owen is not there to speak to him the writer is unwilling to meddle in it. The clerks have refused to speak to the writer about it. Urges Owen to write to his Lordship excusing himself for not waiting on him before leaving town by reason of three weeks indisposition, and desiring him to move the King on Owen's petition. Owen will have heard from others about the duel: Mr Thomas Bulkeley and Sir Boucher Wray principally, Mr Pierce Mostyn and Mr Foster 2nd and 3rd, to Mr Bulkeley, Sir William Williams and Cpt. Hancock to Sir Boucher. Sir William and Foster are slightly wounded; Sir Boucher being disarmed begged his life. Mr Bulkeley had huge provocation and was sober when the other three came to his lodgings at midnight and forced him to be engaged the next morning at 8, which was on Friday last. It was the coldest day the writer has ever experienced. They all dined together that day and almost every day since and are good friends again. Owen is to lose no time in writing, for Lord Sidney is ... torn ... for Ireland and a new secretary is expected to be made every day. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1058. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Mr Edward Lloyd thinks Mr Ayres will take money and relinquish to Owen. The writer told Lloyd that he had no orders to treat, but if Owen would have Wynne do so he should send full powers. Supposes Ayres would take 100 guineas. The Poll Bill went up this morning. The Duke of Norfolk's bill was thrown out last night by 4 votes, so that his Duchess rides triumphant, - which creates no small joy among the amourettes of the town and no small pain to the cornudos. Has heard nothing of Owen's drover or steward. Three of the writer's letters may have gone astray. The votes have nothing in them: both Houses are still upon the point in the King's speech about advice. Their first broadside was against the Lords of the Admiralty and their second against foreign generals. They have debated the matter of the victory last year, merchants' losses and the abortive descent, but nothing concluded except a general vote for a vigorous supply. They began this with the fleet and added 3,000 to the 30,000 seamen they had last year. The Lords go pari passu with Owen's House. The weather is extraordinarily cold with strong easterly winds and violent frosts. There were never harder times in every sense nor more base actions among men: scarce a night without burglary and murder. References to a double match which this winter may bring to a conclusion. So they are like to lose Owen this winter, but his reasons for absence would avail anywhere ... It is hard to answer Owen's query in the second letter. Most people there talk at random and take their aims from the newspapers. Some would have the miscarriage examined into in the first place; others the accounts of all the 22 millions already given; a third sort of a more public spirit

	would have some more millions first given since the delay of giving last year did no good to the common cause. How 4 or 5 million more may be raised - in case it be given - is yet in nubibus. Land must do if all Neale's projects fail; he and those who eat and drink gratis without paying either poulterer or butcher will be for what they call home-excite which miscarried last session but by few voices. Though Harbord who pretended to be master of North Holland economy be now gone yet others will push on the project, but the country gentlemen and some others have each their objection against it. But if they go upon the money in the first place all will be carried as desired, there being a large majority for the Court that will attend. Is sorry for Mr Rowlands's loss. Answered that if any man would have had them it would have been William Wynne. But Wynne must not trust to have those stones. After all their kindness and advice Robert Wynne says that he means to have a mill of his own that will stand as long as any mill in Merioneth. That satisfied the writer for he knows R. W.'s humours. It is the King's express command to the writer to see the decrees of his courts executed as far as possible. Therefore he could not

	deny an order on that behalf, and particularly since the tenants - who have nothing to do in the business - complain that they were utterly undone and disabled from paying any mises by reason of Hooks's vigorous proceedings. Moreover the writer desired Mr Wynne and his friends that some fair end might be made between him and the gentlewoman so that the King's service might not be disturbed. Since the writer's coming away, Hookes - whose authority Byron cannot understand having no commission from either of the Princes or from himself - has with great contempt and mutinous speeches disobeyed the writer's orders 'wherein I assure myself you will not support him'. Therefore desires Owen to commit Hookes to safe custody till he gives, satisfaction for his contempt, for if such petty companions take upon themselves to disobey orders the writer knows not to what purpose he is there. As for Mr Wynne and his pretended wife, the writer wishes some end to be made between them by arbitration of friends, and that in the meantime his order may be observed. PS Hookes being shown the writer's order swore a deep oath he would not obey it. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1076. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The printing of all pamphlets is forbidden. They have a discourse flying about - he knows not if it is true - as if the King had sent a proclamation to forbid the meeting of the approaching intended convention. It is also discoursed as if many lords both spiritual and temporal are dissatisfied with the present posture of things and some of them very great ones too, viz the Dukes of Beaufort and Newcastle, the Marquis of Halifax and the Earl of Nottingham, etc. The Earls of Peterborough and Salisbury are very well and merry in the Tower. But the Lord Chancellor is exceedingly ill of the stone - his old tormenting malady. The French have overrun Freezland and Zealand, it is strongly reported, and Breda, etc., also taken; and they commit great and lamentable outrages where they meet with opposition. God preserve the royal Princess from their fury. The Prince of Orange is sickly and some say longs to be going home. The City of London have sent him £200,000 - some say more - upon the revenue of excise and customs to be repaid with common interest in three months' time. Attached on a separate sheet but bearing no date: Prays Owen to keep this as a secret sub rosa. The States of Holland are said to remonstrate their distresses to the King of England praying the King's aid. The Prince of Orange received several expresses of late: he reads and burns them. The King's coaches are said to be sent to Lord Dartmouth to bring him honourably to London. The soldiers begin to cry they want their King. Owen is to reduce his terms and proposals into writing. Asks a favour for Sir Philip Lloyd's daughter. Colonel Edward Lloyd left no will that can be heard of in England or Holland and yet designed all his estate to Sir Philip's youngest daughter and told many so. Does Owen recollect having heard him say anything as to whose hands the will was in in England or Holland? Mr Holmes knows nothing. Another difficulty is that the Dutch pretend to dispose of the estate and to have the cognizance of the cause because not only Colonel Edward Lloyd but his father also and his grandfather, the writer thinks, were born in Holland. The parish register of the place they were supposed to have been born in in Montgomeryshire says nothing. Some 'living registry' or some relation who may have some letters or papers are the likeliest to have some account of the matter. The grandfather whose name the writer thinks was Broghwell is supposed to have left England about 1625: his son - the father of Colonel Edward and Sir Philip - is said to have died at about 28 or 30 years of age. Begs Owen to let him have what information he can give. PS Wishes Owen and his Lady much joy on the birth of a son which God has sent them as an additional strength to their family. Desires the interest of her good nature to commiserate and her generosity to reward the most sublime faithful and true passion that ever a man of his character was capable of. None perhaps may have more infirmities than he which her goodness may happily pass by ... and he be so fortunate as to obtain his suit without betraying his own cause which now lies wholly in her to grant. The custom which makes the consent of friends necessary in the arts of love he has followed and he believes successfully: her father and mother did not seem averse to his happiness, so that now his greatest concern - his fate, his heaven or hell - are to be doomed 'by you my goddess in which title I hope to find the chiefest attribute which is love'. Although 'our' forces are all in a manner returned from Merionethshire where their number was more than could be justly expected from the county, and those better armed, considering their loss of arms in Denbighshire, than the writer could have believed, yet his correspondents will have daily occasions, even in complying with the commands of Lord Byron, to make use of their officers and ministers and the constables especially; and therefore the writer would advise them, being so many wise and discreet men in that corner of the county and such as have sufficiently proved their fidelity to the King and his cause, to take out of the hands of those officers or marshals pretending authority from Lord Byron all constables and officers which are hourly to be employed by his correspondents in the King's service unless they be such as they or any three of them find to be wilfully negligent of the King's service, until such time as the writer shall acquaint Lord Byron of the miscarriages of these persons and the great inconveniences which thereby may befall both the King's and Lord Byron's service in those parts. The writer has ever been of the opinion, and has often heard as much from Prince Rupert's own mouth, that the King has never granted to any person power to exercise marshal power upon anybody - merely on the soldiers; and, as his correspondents truly mention, that all other penalties on other subjects still remain in the commissioners and gentlemen in whom they are invested by the laws of the land. Lastly if they continue in their design to have a general meeting of the commissioners of array and of the peace and the prime gentry of the county at Bangor, which is a Bishop's see and about the middle of the county, the writer asks them to send this letter or a copy thereof attested by themselves to Sir John Owen, High Sheriff, desiring him in the Archbishop's name and his own to summon a meeting to that effect, issuing forth at the same time 6 or 7 copies of the summons to the several parts of the county and appointing the day of meeting six days after the date of the summons. Does not doubt that there will be such an appearance as the weightiness of the business requires, being a consultation upon the King's letters and other business concerning the preservation of their own country. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clenennau letters and papers 1085. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location:

Clenennau letters and papers 1087. vtls005595025 ISYSARCHB54	File - An unknown correspondent [probably Edward Lloyd] to Sir Robert Owen at Clenennau,	[? c.1683].
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Thanks for two letters received. The writer fancies that Owen has described his house and hill and wood and fountains only to tempt him to write something upon them, which he would certainly do but for admirable Cooper's Hill which nothing can outdo. Worthy Ned is in town and blesses the writer's eyes and ears with the sight of his sweet face and charming tongue. Ned has given Owen the news which the dull town affords. The plot is silent now and all the 'gentlemen peachers' cabal in private at Lord Shaftesbury's, the effects of which will be shown in good time to make them merry with. Owen knows that Shaftesbury is (out of) the Council. The Duke went yesterday to Scotland and the Duke of Buckingham to Holland with a French 'misse' and that is all. There is no new whoring, but for want of variety or through laziness - or want of cash - the old keep constant and 'dully moyle on still'. Little Ned and John Crosbie ... have had many shrewd bouts: the good lad grows weak in the head-piece and they say his drinking fails him, but this we must all come to. The writer has not seen a face of anyone of Owen's acquaintance. Sir Phill is in a little tribulation. The writer is plagued dull and has done just nothing since he saw Owen, otherwise he would have written some doggerel for Owen ... The valiant Cid stayed on some time after Owen left to complete his conquest of Moll ... but he used the wrong rhetoric or thought it not worthy to bestow on stale ware. Their sister poetess is newly equipped, they having made a purse for her which has put a new scabbard on the rusted blade - but still she stinks, for, as the writer's friend the mad lover has it, she may be a princess and stink still: she is much enamoured of Edward ... 'Tis thought she will facilitate her cure for the conquest ... health and a new gown go a long way to atone for a bad face; but the gentleman is still squeamish and so a little cruel. The writer has a rare book for Owen in which he will find great comfort; 'tis called the Count of Gabalis, a learned rosicrusian who tells us fine tales of sylphes, gnomes, nimpes and sallamanders all of which are faire ladys more kind, more desirable and safe than woman kind'. If Owen prays hard he may attain to the conversation of some of these - as good a mistress to entertain a man in the mountains of Wales as could be wished for. Wishes he could send Owen the book for it is very pleasant, witty and new ... Hopes Owen's matrimonial foppery goes not on: were it not for the blood of the Owens, it would be a pity that so excellent a man should be noosed ... but 'tis only exchanging 'the beaux garcons for the bone home' ... Asks for word how it goes ... PS For God's sake Owen must send him some verses to relish his fancy with. Tuesday night: the writer never understood an almanac though he reverences those that do: but tomorrow is Lord Mayor's Day. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Clenennau letters and papers 1089. vtls005595027 ISYSARCHB54	File - Pr. and S. Tomkies to (William Owen of Porkington). Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: This letter written sometime during the first half of the eighteenth century is concerned with a claim to a seat in Selattin Church. The claim is pressed by the first of the signatories on behalf of the second who is his wife, and the letter contains the following references to Colonel William Owen and Sir Robert Owen. The writer would not be guilty of coveting an inch of the appurtenances belonging to any branch of the estate of the heroic Colonel whom the writer saw recorded in the list of the loyalists and whose name was a terror to both Fairfax and the grand usurper; that worthy man that neither the allurements of preferment nor the dread of sequestrators could remove his integrity nor draw him from his loyalty to his prince; the true Briton of honourable descent who, in those perilous times, regardless of all opposition, unsheathed his sword in defence of the Church, the royal martyr and his bleeding country, looked death in the face and sprinkled his belt with his enemies' blood. Nor can the writer forget the Honourable Sir Robert Owen. Though the writer was but a boy, yet it is fresh in his mind how Sir Robert stood a true member of the Church when Mr James Owens [see no. 960], the great dissenting minister, 'kept like a little university where our workhouse was' (in Oswestry). He and two others called elders sent a challenge to Bishop Floyd (sic), who was at Porkington at the time of visitation, to dispute with them at the Town Hall. The Bishop accepted the challenge accompanied by Sir Robert and Esquire Littleton. The dispute held long. The dissenters would have the Disciples to have the same power as the Apostles ... At last they came to the old fathers, the dissenters quoting a passage of St Jerome's. The two gentlemen started up ... and soon baffled them with their own arguments. The writer says this without the least stain of either fear or flattery for there is not an old couple in the street better pleased than the writer and his wife to see Porkington in the flourishing state it is in at present. PS The writer is given a little ease to think that he has fallen into a gentleman's hands in the person of William Owen, the son of Sir Robert Owen, whom the great crowd that came to hear the pleading above mentioned allowed to be well acquainted with the sacred writings, a fine scholar and accomplished gentleman, and with united voices made the hall resound the echoes of their acclamation. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers 1089. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location:

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Answer of William Maurice to a complaint by Thomas Ellis and others, executors of the will of Eliza ap Cadwaladr, relating to the defendant's intrusion on Cwm Allt y Mynach Bach in Tregest, which the Ellis family claim to be their freehold. Plaintiff admits that the adjoining holding of Cwm Allt y Mynach Mawr, consisting of 200 acres of pasture is crown land. William Maurice claims that the combined holding is crown property, that the Ellis family intruded on Cwm Allt Mynach Bach and that in consequence he brought an action against them in Chancery. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers App I/24. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

This he omitted to do because the commission was sued by Lady Eure, the farmer. (2) He secured witnesses to commit wilful perjury. No answer. (3) As deputy - lieutenant he levied and received money to provide armour. Appeals to the orders of the Lord Lieutenant. Asserts that he has laid out on that service £300 of his own money. (4) Has received money for the repairing of bridges. Asserts that he has paid out £40 or £50 more than he ever received in this respect. (5) Having been appointed Treasurer for maimed soldiers, he continued to levy money after his year of office had expired. Asserts that he has already paid out money which he had not received - so he hopes his action was lawful. (6) Maintains sorcery. This he utterly condemns and abhors as most wicked; for his own part desires all witches and sorcery to do him the worst and the devil their master. (7) He is charged with maintaining lewd and unnecessary alehouses. He replies that he is the only JP who has taken action against alehouses, but that Owen Ellis and his brother-in-law do maintain them and commit most filthy abuses in them. (8) Accusation of injustice to Robert Wynne of Penyfed [see App I/70]. This matter has now been settled elsewhere. Hopes that it is not to be raised again. There is a blank space left for an additional charge. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers App I/40. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location:

But those leases and terms are now expired. The tenements of Ynyscynhaern and Bron y Gadair in controversy are partly Crown and partly gavelkind land. The gavelkind land formerly belonged to Einion ap Gruffydd and came by several descents to Robert Gruffydd Lloyd, who had the same surveyed by a close kinsman of Sir William Maurice who was then the patentee of Tregist. Sale of freehold lands by the then tenants in Tregest - namely Moelfre Mawr to Ellis Morris (6 Ed.VI) and Hendre Gadrodd to William Maurice (28 Eliz.). In Queen Mary's time Ellis Morris took a lease of Tregest at £10 per annum for which he paid £250. This lease by oft renewing from 21 years to 21 years continued in the family until near the death of King James, and after that by a longer lease until 1679. Moelfre Mawr and Hendre Gadrodd together with lands in neighbouring townships were given by William Maurice in jointure to his eldest son (28 Eliz.). In 8 James the trustees of this grant vested the lands in the name of John Owen who married Elin, one of the daughters of the eldest son, afterwards known by the name of Lady Eure. In 15 James, Sir William Maurice preferred a bill in Chancery againsy Owen Ellis who held about 600 acres of freehold in Gest to oblige him to show title. Only four bovates of freehold in Tregest, according to the extent of 1352. Bovate was used to describe corn ground only. In two hundred years 2,000 acres of land might be turned to tillage. It seems that Ellis did show his title, for 600 acres continue to his heirs to this day. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers App I/48. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

She was dissatisfied with the recompense for her maintenance and with her daughter-in-law's unkind usages which caused her to remove to her house in Caernarvon. A promise that she should have part of her lands at a reasonable rent, and all her goods and household stuff, was not performed. All her lands and farms were sold before her face. Defendant's father, who was vicar of Llantrisant, leased the mill to Sir William for 101 years on condition that the lease should be void if the lessor or his heirs paid Sir William £80 ... It was later agreed that Sir William should enjoy the profits of the vicarage for eight years in discharge of the said mortgage, although Sir William for his security was to continue to hold the 101 years' lease until the eight years lease expired. The profits of the vicarage are £26 per annum, and have been enjoyed by the defendant for four years, so that he has already received more than £80. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:

Clenennau letters and papers App I/74. vtls005595108 ISYSARCHB54	File - Examination of Oliver Traunchant relating to the ship John of St Malloves which had landed at Pwllheli, taken by John ..., Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:	1589/90, Feb. 16.

	Examination of Oliver Traunchant relating to the ship John of St Malloves which had landed at Pwllheli, taken by John Gruffydd, esq., commissioner authorised by the Court of Admiralty. He was born at St Malloves, Brittany. Sailed from there on the 16th May last in a ship called The John of St Malloves being laden with victuals and 45 tons of bay salt to go to the 'newe found land afishing'. The owners of the ship were Jeffrey Collett, John Trotier, the examinant, Louis Traunchant and others. They were fishing in the 'newe found land' three months, and carried thence two hundred thousand fish which they brought to St Lucas in Spain. There they sold the same and bought three score tun of sack and thirty tun of salt which they meant to bring home to St Malloves, there to make sale thereof to English merchants if they met them there. Continued in St Lucas two months. Being asked what furniture the ship had for the war, he said they had six cast pieces, three bases and fifteen calivers. There were 44 men on board at the beginning of the voyage, whereof two miscarried and nine were given leave to go with another ship of their country which wanted men. When they were three score leagues from St Malloves they met an English man-o-war of fifty or sixty tons burden. Four of the principle men of the English ship entered the John on Christmas day. Later the captain put sixteen men aboard and took sixteen of the principle Frenchmen aboard the man-o-war. The chief of the Englishmen set aboard appointed for Capt. John Bettes, and for master William Blaunche. They were appointed to attend the man-o-war, and so followed it for three days and three nights. Then by force of weather they were severed and first came upon the coast of Ireland and then came upon the coast of North Wales to a place called Stidwales [St Tudwals], and then to the port of Pwllheli. The ship now lies at Pwllheli spoiled for want of good government. Thinks that ten tun of good sack and five tun not so good (which is brackish) have been saved. All the salt is lost. There were also some oranges and lemons aboard, as well as some figs and raisins, a pack of twelve tapestries and some coin to the number of a thousand crowns. The examinant had sixty crowns taken from him, whereof the captain had thirty seven and the rest among the company. Says that he knows William Maurice, esq., one of the lieutenants of Caernarfonshire and Gruffydd ap John Gruffydd the sheriff because they had him in examination on matters concerning the said ship. They promised to help to his right by taking the Englishmen who were thieves and causing them to restore the money. They summoned the captain and master ashore but they refused to come. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennennau letters and papers App I/74. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

(1) The common sort of pirates to that place to the great spoil and annoyance of the country. (2) William Blanche, the master of the ship, a known pirate, about two years before took a ship of Rye owned by Mr Watt, a Londoner. (3) The sheriff and justice of the peace, Hugh Gwyn and Thomas Madryn, were imprisoned and fined by the Council of the Marches for not apprehending the like pirates. (4) The Lord Admiral's officer, Thomas Wynn, will not apprehend any of them but rather patronises them as he has done these men. (5) The danger of the time. Hugh Owen, being their countryman and traitor, and gone (as is thought) with Sir William Banbury to Spain. Lest he should either seek or send for intelligence or send spies for the like. A cause most requisite to be careful of, because the said Thomas Wynn is a brother-in-law to Hugh Owen the traitor. The manner of proceeding: (1) They were charged upon their allegiance to submit themselves to examination, and to allow the ship to be examined lest any spies or unlawful persons were aboard. They refused saying they would rather burn themselves and the ship. (2) A person was then sent with a saw to cut their rudder, thereby to force them to remain to give answer. They discharged shot at him, shooting him through the shoulder. He is now in danger of his life. (3) They sent up a French flag of defiance which was done in derogation of Her Majesty with diverse other lewd speeches and outrages by them committed. (4) The writer and other the Queen's officers took care, when the ship's company eventually submitted and suffered the ship to be anchored, to safeguard all that could be saved of the ship's goods. Clenennau letters and papers App I/121. vtls005595156 ISYSARCHB54	File - Draft Certificate intended for the [?1587]. Earl of Pembroke, Lord President [of the Council of the Marches in Wales] from John ..., Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Draft Certificate intended for the Earl of Pembroke, Lord President [of the Council of the Marches in Wales] from John Wynn and William Maurice, deputy lieutenants. Caernarfonshire is 60 miles long, environed by the ocean on three sides. It has ten hundreds, commonly called commotes, [and] three market towns, Pwllheli, Caernarvon and Conwy. The last recited are walled, having Her Majesty's houses in them, being before the use of great artillery of great strength. The deputy lieutenants live at opposite ends of the country, 20 miles apart. Therefore they thought it useful to divide the limit, assigning the five commotes next adjoining to his mansion to John Wynn, that is, the end of the country next adjoining Denbighshire. To William Maurice fell the remaining commotes. They have gone as near as might be to learn the true number of able men which they certify to be (blank) whereof armed or appointed to provide armour (blank), and trained on foot and appointed to be trained 300, to which they have appointed three captains, men sound in religion and well affected to the state. They are Gr[iffith] ap John Gr[iffith], Thomas Vaughan and Edward Williams. The country they find willing and obedient to do their [duties] and well disposed to provide arms, which are much decayed in the last years of dearth for the whole country did live on the corn they bought. Yet in so great a multitude there are some obstinate, who to reform they humbly pray the President's aid. Her Majesty's letters require that the number of lances and light horse be augmented. They have gone as far as the ability of the country extends. The country is rough and in most places has no fit hay for the maintenance of horses of service. The country being maritime and open to danger, warrant was made for the assembly of the justices of the peace, gentlemen and freeholders of the better sort. There it was found necessary to have a store of powder, match and bullet whereof the towns in these parts are destitute, so that one barrel is not to be had for any money. By consent a mise of £120 was voted for the provision of these wants, which would have been cessed long since but the penury of the year and the stubbornness of some of the meaner sort who mislike every imposition be they ever so necessary. May it please his Lordship to signify his allowance or dislike of the proceeding therein, and then to authorise them to levy the same. They ask his Lordship to bind defaulters to appear before him. The muster master has attended diligently to his post without any consideration as yet. Defect in training is no fault of his, but of the penury of the country and the slow provision of armour which they mean hereafter by diligence to see reformed. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: Clennau letters and papers App I/121. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Is-fonds | Subfonds Brogyntyn (Longueville) Papers: Brogyntyn (Longueville) Papers

Crëwr | Creator: Longueville Gittins, Solicitors.

Dyddiad | Date: [1600x1899], 1607-1977 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Papers relating to the Brogyntyn estate, extracted from the Longueville and Co. solicitors' collection. There are three main groups comprising probate records, settlements and trusts, 1626-1974; rentals, accounts, vouchers, inventories and valuations, 1795-1934; and deeds and related documents, [1600x1899], 1607-1977. There are also six single series, of sale catalogues and papers relating to estate sales, 1827-1919; papers relating to land improvement, 1839-1955; papers relating to railway and electricity development schemes, 1866-1927; miscellaneous letters and estate papers, 1830-1880, legal papers, 1863-[c. 1924] and mortgages, 1870-1923

Disgrifiad ffisegol | Physical description: 60 large archival boxes, 4 flat boxes (1.75 cubic metres)

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

Brogyntyn is usually called Porkington in the original documents until the late nineteenth century. Original forms of abodes have been retained. Parish names are standardised

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

Some file titles are original, shown by inverted commas; others are based on content.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The terms 'map' and 'plan' are used somewhat loosely, in accordance with the original documents

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The number of items in a file normally includes maps and other enclosures. The exceptions are the estate vouchers (ref. 30/1 – 32/1), which are counted by their original numbers and not by the items inside. Some large files are measured in centimetres.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The majority of items are endorsed with notes of the contents and dates.

Ffynhonnell | Immediate source of acquisition:

Deposited by Longueville Gittins solicitors, Oswestry (previously Messrs Longueville and Co.) between 1942 and 1992.

Trefniant | Arrangement:

Arranged into three main groups by category of document and six single series. Each bundle created by the Longueville solicitors' office is treated as a file within the relevant sections. Exceptionally large files have been divided for convenience of handling, as described at file level.

Rhestrau cymorth | Finding aids:

Items numbered 1/1-19/1 are described in a hard copy of the catalogue (1958), which is available at the National Library of Wales.

Nos 20/1-71/3 comprise a continuation of the Brogyntyn (Longueville) group, assembled from the various deposits made between 1942 and 1992. Both groups have been amalgamated here in compliance with ISAD(G) standards but the sequence of numbering has been disrupted as a result. A hard copy catalogue (NLW 1960, p. 134) describes a small number of additional items relating to the Brogyntyn estates, renumbered here as 72/1-12.

Cyfres | Series 29/1-9: Brogyntyn trust accounts and vouchers

Dyddiad | Date: 1848-1934 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Brogyntyn trust accounts and vouchers, which include substantial bills of costs for legal services provided by Longueville and Co., 1848-1934. The titles of the files generally reflect the content. The bills elucidate the trustees' functions, the details of family settlements, land purchases, sales, estate improvements and investments in stocks and shares under the terms of the trusts. There are accompanying letters to and by Longueville and Co., H.T. Dix of Dublin, other solicitors, Lord Harlech, the Brogyntyn trustees, surveyors and auctioneers. Many of the accounts refer to the sale of parts of Lord Harlech's estate under the Irish Land Commission schemes in the first quarter of the twentieth century. Most files contain authorisations by Lord Harlech to the trustees to invest or release money, and brokers' notes for the purchase or transfer of stocks and shares.

Sub-sub-sub-fonds 30/1- 32/1, 71/1-12: Estate vouchers

Dyddiad | Date: (Watermark 1828)-1887 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

A discrete group of numbered vouchers (bills and receipts) originating from three estates belonging to the Ormsby Gore family, namely Porkington (Brogyntyn), 1864-1869, Merioneth and Caernarfonshire, 1860-1874, and Cemais, Montgomeryshire, 1864; and a further group of miscellaneous vouchers from the various Welsh and Irish estates (Watermark 1828)-1887.

Disgrifiad ffisegol | Physical description: 50 bundles

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

The size of each file is counted by the original numbered vouchers but each number usually includes several individual items. Where numbers are not clear the files are measured in centimetres.

Trefniant | Arrangement:

Arranged into three groups of estate vouchers, from Porkington (Brogyntyn), Merioneth and Caernarfonshire, and Montgomeryshire respectively, followed by one additional series of miscellaneous vouchers.

Cyfres | Series 30/1-3: Porkington (Brogyntyn) estate vouchers

Dyddiad | Date: 1864-1869 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Bundles labelled 'Porkington estate vouchers' 1864-1869. The descriptions on the labels do not always match the dates of the receipts. Most of the vouchers are numbered but some are missing from the sequence. They cover both the Porkington (Brogyntyn) estate and the Llanddyn estate at Llangollen. Typically they include bills and receipts for building materials, repairs to buildings, railway freight of stone and timber, ironmongery, coal, stationery, labourers' wages, land drainage, garden work under James Edwards, bailiff's bills of David McConnell, gamekeeping equipment, tithe rent charges, general district rates, church rates, poor rates, land tax, income tax and chief rents in Selatyn, Oswestry, Whittington, Llanforda, Middleton and Llangollen, subscriptions to schools at Trefor [Llangollen], Llandysilio and Guilsfield, subscriptions to Shropshire and North Wales Natural History and Antiquarian Society, annuities, allowances and sick pay, and the rent of a pew in Oswestry parish church. There are occasional letters from tradesmen presenting bills to the Brogyntyn agent. Specific points of interest are described at file level.

Cyfres | Series 72/1-12: Miscellaneous Welsh and Irish estate vouchers

Dyddiad | Date: (Watermark 1828)-1887 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Miscellaneous vouchers from the Welsh and Irish estates of the Ormsby Gore family, Barons Harlech (Watermark 1828)-1887, found at NLW after the cataloguing of the main groups was complete (!) Some bundles relate separately to the Glyn estate in Merioneth and Caernarfonshire, Cemais and Penrhos in Montgomeryshire, or the Irish estates in Sligo, Leitrim, Roscommon and Westmeath; other bundles contain a combination of these and the Brogyntyn estate in Shropshire and Denbighshire. The presence of original labels and wrappers suggests that these groupings, though irregular, are genuine. Some bundles contain several smaller packets inside, in which the individual items were once numbered; many of the numbers are missing or out of sequence. Some packets are conveniently labelled by the agent's name or by category. Typically the contents comprise large numbers of bills and receipts for estate labour and wages, agents' remittances, building materials, ironmongery, farriery, provisions, stationery, freight of goods by railway, repairs to estate properties and school buildings, marsh drainage, forestry plantations, surveys and valuations, legal expenses, poor rates, highway rates, land tax, property tax, income tax, the grand jury cess (Ireland), quit rents, crown rents, chief rents, tithe rents, insurance, and subscriptions to schools, churches, clothing clubs, other charities and freemasons, together with some accounts and covering letters by the collectors and agents. There are particularly large numbers of poor rate receipts from the unions of Tobercurry, Sligo, Mohill, Bawnboy, Carrick-on-Shannon, Granard, Strokestown and Swinford, Ireland. One file in this series (72/3) contains the papers of John Edward Parry, agent of the Glyn estate, 1856-1876

Parry's estate taken from Mr Jones's side table 18 April 1876', referring to John Edward Parry, agent of the Glyn estate, Talsarnau. These papers also include a packet of vouchers from the Penrhos estate, Montgomeryshire, 1870-1871. The whole file has now been divided into six smaller bundles for convenience of handling. As expected, some of the content derives from J.E. Parry's management of the Glyn estate. Many other vouchers and accounts relate to building work for J.E. Parry at Moelygarnedd, Bala, by Richard Roberts, William Evans, Edward Jones and others, 1872-1875; and there are traced plans of Moelygarnedd, 1873-1875. Other items include bank books of John E. Parry in account with	1856-1876	6 bundles (25 cm)

The letters are mostly to or by J.E. Parry, and occasionally William Ormsby Gore. Correspondents include Parry's agent or foreman, Richard Roberts (in Welsh) concerning the building work and grounds at Moelygarnedd, 1873-1875; T.H. Clough of Ruthin, about Parry's request for a lease on the College Plantation, Bala, 1873; Robert Jones of Bryn Tegid on the necessity of widening Llanycil Bridge, 1875; and A.A. Passingham on behalf of the Local Board, requesting Moelygarnedd land to create a reservoir near Bala, 1875. The Penrhos estate vouchers relate mostly to building repairs and work on the timber plantations, 1870-1871. Amodau rheoli defnydd / Conditions governing use: Usual copyright laws apply Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Enclosed in account books of J.E. Sub-sub-fonds Deeds and related documents: Deeds and related documents

Dyddiad | Date: [1600x1899], 1607-1977 (dyddiad creu) | (date of creation)

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content:

Title deeds and other associated documents concerning properties belonging to the Owen and Ormsby Gore families of Brogyntyn in Salop (Shropshire), 1607-1939, Montgomeryshire, 1647-1902, Merioneth, 1706-1961, Caernarfonshire, 1813-1924, Denbighshire, 1844-1898, Flintshire, 1870-1897, London, 1795-1895, Ireland, 1665-1920, and miscellaneous locations, [1600x1899], 1729-1977. The deeds reflect the consolidation of the Brogyntyn home estates in and around Oswestry and Selatyn, the development of the brick-making industry in Shropshire, the leasing of mines and quarries under mountain farms in Merioneth and Caernarfonshire, and building developments in the popular resorts of Borth-y-gest, Cricieth and Portmadoc. Most of the purchases were made by the Brogyntyn trustees in accordance with the terms of family wills and settlements, particularly those of 1815, 1844 and 1881. Consequently many of the files contain official reports, orders, etc. issued by the High Court of Chancery in connection with the purchases; these are not described at file level unless deemed to be especially significant. Some deeds record sales of parts of the Ormsby Gore family estates for the purposes of water supply, cemeteries, chapels and schools, and for the schemes of the Irish Land Commission

Disgrifiad ffisegol | Physical description: 127 bundles, 22 envelopes, 6 envelopes, 6 loose items, 64 other files (size not specified)

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

Most of the deeds are endorsed with dates and notes of contents. Many are endorsed with receipts for purchase money, engrossments, solicitors' memos and instructions. Some have original numbers allocated by the Brogyntyn estate or by the Longueville office.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

Many of the deed bundles include maps or plans.

Nodyn | Note [generalNote]:

File titles are based on content but incorporate as much of the original title as necessary.
