Nodyn | Note

Stuart Rendel, 1st Baron Rendel (1834-1913), was an industrialist and politician. He was born in Plymouth, Devon, the son of James Meadows Rendel (1799-1856), a civil engineer, and Catherine Jane Rendel (née Harris, 1797-1884). He went to Eton, and graduated from Oriel College, Oxford, in 1856. Despite being called to the Bar, he eventually became the manager of the Sir William Armstrong & Co. gunnery company, being vice-chairman of the company by the time of his death. The links he formed with foreign governments in this capacity became useful when he was involved in peace negotiations between China and France in 1885. In 1880 he was elected the Liberal Member of Parliament for Montgomeryshire, becoming the chairman of the 'Welsh Parliamentary Party', 1888-1894. He was heavily involved with the Welsh Intermediate Education Act, 1889, and with proposals for the disestablishment of the church in Wales. He was a close friend of W. E. Gladstone, and following Gladstone's resignation in 1894 he was elevated to the House of Lords as Baron Rendel. He was president of University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, 1895-1913, contributing £1000 a year to the College. He also donated land in Aberystwyth to serve as the site for the National Library of Wales, in 1897. In 1857 he married Ellen Sophy Hubbard (died 1912), and they had four daughters. He died on 4 June 1913 in London. George Wightwick Rendel (1833-1902), Lord Rendel's elder brother, was a civil engineer. A partner in William Armstrong & Co., he directed the ordnance works at Elswick for 24 years and designed warships. He was Civil Lord of the Admiralty, 1882-1887. He married twice and had nine children, including Sir George William Rendel. He died at Sandown, Isle of Wight, on 9 October 1902. Sir George William Rendel (1889-1979) was a diplomat. He was educated at Downside and at Queen's College Oxford, graduating in Modern History in 1911. He then entered the Diplomatic Service, serving in various European capitals. Amongst other positions he was head of the Eastern Department of the Foreign Office, 1930-1938, Ambassador to the Yugoslav Government in London, 1941-1943, and British Ambassador to Belgium, 1947-1950. He represented the United Kingdom on various committees of the United Nations. Although he retired in 1950, he was employed by the Foreign Office in various capacities, 1950-1964. In 1937, he crossed Arabia, travelling with his wife Geraldine (1884-1965). He wrote a volume of memoirs, The Sword and the Olive (1957). His daughter was Miss Rosemary Rendel. He was knighted in 1943 and died 6 May 1979. Lord Rendel's eldest daughter Rose Ellen married Professor H. C. Goodhart (died 1895) and they had one son, Harry Stuart Goodhart-Rendel (1887-1959), an architect and musician. He inherited the bulk of Lord Rendel's estate in 1913, and died, unmarried, in 1959.

Hanes Gwarchodol | Custodial history

Most of the papers seem to have stayed in the possession of the family. H. S. Goodhart-Rendel inherited the bulk of Lord Rendel's estate and Rosemary Rendel, who acquired some of the later Rendel family papers, is the grand-niece of Lord Rendel.

1743. vtls005332184 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart,	1882, July 30.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Describes his frustrated attempts to negotiate at Shanghai a bonding system which had been promised under the non-ratified Alcock Convention of 1868 and the ratified German convention of 1879-81, the Chinese always insisting on the duties being paid on entering the warehouses not on leaving, which was the essence of the whole system; fears that Germany would let out line, play the fish and then suddenly run him up when not expected and land something besides; meantime the Germans, with an iron-clad building trade to experiment on and encourage at Stettin, could afford to be pleasant at the Foreign Office and not press for what the merchants with only 5% ad valorem duties do not require, and tell the Yamen 'it's not me it's the custom-house Englishman Hart, that is giving you all this financial worry'; nevertheless China was making steady progress and keeping free from all embarrassing engagements and entanglements; thanks Rendel for his efforts to secure him a KCMG; Li was temporarily out of office and his successor Chang was taking the ship on the same tack and under easy sail; hoped that when Li reappeared he would go on with the naval work and knew that he was thinking favourably of the 'perfected cruiser'; Hart had advised against the purchase of iron-clads because China could not handle or maintain them, with neither harbour docks nor men and could not afford money for the first class specimens; took his advice in so far that they stuck to their own idea, but did not give the execution of it to him; sends him a copy of Sir W. Armstrong's National Defences in Chinese. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1743. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1278. vtls005332197 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Admiral Richard V. Hamilton, 1882, Dec. 6. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Concurs with the general principles of Rendel's pamphlet and believes that guns should be a matter of open competition, as indeed was every other portion of the ship and he would have the best wherever it came from; considers all monopoly to be bad and government monopoly worst of all; if Woolwich could not supply the gun carriage they had no right to monopolise the gun; is pleased that the Navy had made progress towards home rule in ordnance, being more liberal and advanced in these matters than the War Office (though mostly Conservative in politics), being convinced of the necessity of courting aid of civil engineering talent of the day; it was owing to the want of encouragement that Gardner, Gatling, Nordenfelt and Hotchkiss were all foreigners; there was plenty of native talent in Britain; believes that rifled mortars would play an important part in future wars; advises the Elswick Ordnance Co. to develop their manufacture and devise the best boats for carrying them. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1278. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1744-5. vtls005332206 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart (and printed copy), 1883, Feb. 20. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Complains bitterly of the attitude of British consular officials to the Chinese authorities and to the British officials employed by the Chinese customs; when the Inspectorate was established the Chinese officials did not like it because they saw in the employment of foreigners a loss of sundry ways of enriching themselves; foreign merchants did not like it because they feared that they would be expected to observe rules and regulations; consuls did not like it because they feared that their 'new territories' would be endangered and that they would be pushed back into their nationally recognised states; England had at that time consuls in every port and no merchant consuls; the foreign non-merchant consuls gave their nationals in the Inspectorate every support, while the merchant consuls had the additional advantage that they could mix mercantile with official business to such an extent as to be easily able to take the lead from brother merchants whose consuls act so as to make it difficult to approach the native official, thus 1) official contracts for war materials and Government enterprises more likely to be secured by non-Britishers, 2) non-British consuls on a pleasanter footing with Chinese officials than their British colleagues and 3) non-British commissioners of customs being always made much of by their national consul and never checked or thwarted were more influential with the Chinese officials and on a more friendly and intimate footing than the British Commissioners, who were as a rule snubbed, sat on and opposed by the British consuls; British consuls determined to make difficulties for the British officials

	of the Chinese customs, but dared not interfere with the commissioners of other nationalities; he had been forced to employ the German Detring as commissioner in Tientsin because a British commissioner would be subject to continued 'settings down' from the consul at Tientsin and the Legation at Peking; sufficiently loyal to himself and China, Detring had done first class work at Tientsin, but naturally his presence there furthered German interests, with German military men serving under Li, Germany supplying arms and iron-clads and Germans competing on the 'less expensive' principle for naval appointments; Detring then on leave replaced by Hobson who could hardly be expected to eradicate well-planted German roots, which struck deep during Detring's five years at Tientsin - might possibly put a British graft on a growing plant; if he reappointed Detring to Tientsin it would only be because of a feeling that a strengthened German commissioner would do better for China than an officially emasculated Britisher; maintains that other foreign Governments had tried to make an ally of China, praised her good points and pointed out how badly others (particularly England) had treated her, showed civilities which cost nothing, gave official assistance to official enterprises sure to carry its own reward to the experimenting or business-seeking patrons, e.g. the Stettin iron-clads; while every other power was China's suitor, England held off coldly, though gradually proving that her friendship was real and disinterested; China certain to be one of the greatest powers of the future and Hart had always hoped she would have chosen England as an ally but, if she did so, she would be led by her own keen intelligence and great good sense, not from the gratitude that sprung from kindly and graceful assistance; England was not civil to China and English interests were affected prejudicially; believes that a direct circular should be sent from the Foreign Office to the Consuls that they should treat the British Officials of Chinese Customs Service with civility and not be guided by unfriendly jealousy, which was harmful to British interests and that they should be required to countenance and befriend them, as was their right as fellow-Britishers; states that from a Chinese and Service point of view he would be sorry to see the Customs Service 'dis-Britishised', for under no other leadership would so broad a view of Chinese interests be taken; letter written on 48th birthday after 29 years' service in China and he was now longing to return home. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1744-5. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
1746. vtls005332207 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart, 1883, Feb. 25. Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Comments on the success of the Egyptian campaign; wishes the change at Elswick well; greatly approves of Samuel's opium scheme, which was best for India in that it secured a revenue for a fixed and renewable period and the best for China, as it secured its revenues and made smuggling with its attendant evils, bloodshed, mercantile embarrassments, official worries and international bickerings impossible, and England and China were able to effect an agreement without consulting any other country; backbone of the scheme was that Samuel undertook to get hold of all the opium, so that nobody could find any to import; Hart had refused Samuel's request to take an 'interest' in the matter, as he would rather beg than make money out of opium for China; Wade only a lukewarm supporter; but Hart believes that 1) the only possible settlement was to provide that India should continue to supply the Chinese opium demand, 2) the best settlement would secure both Governments their revenues, allay excited feelings and place them in a better position to deal with opium in the future, 3) the agitation in England and China's desire to stop opium smoking was a wish and not a will and 4) Governments should recognise the facts and do their best under the circumstances, which could be effected by the Samuel scheme; congratulates him on the success of the 100 ton gun; states th[e]n that he had marked the letter (1744) 'confidential', but left it to Rendel's discretion to make any use he wished of it. In a P.S. (dated 1 March 1893) he refers to the proposed opium negotiations with China; believes Wade would try to edge in and take other questions in the settlement, such as the Lekin question, the treaty-port radius, reception of ministers by the Empress, telegraphy, etc., which would spoil all; wishes Rendel in such a case to give the right person the hint and keep the discussions to the opium question, otherwise, if Marquis Tseng yielded, he would probably find the London arrangement rejected at Peking; pays a tribute to Wade's fine qualities and attainments as a

	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Had written to him freely on Chinese affairs, because he took an intelligent interest in China and England's international relations, and in order that he might be able to put his views before influential men in England, merely wishing to supply yeast, leaving him to put it in at the right moment among the right material; believes that English officials in China required a hint from headquarters to avoid wounding China's susceptibilities and to secure the good will of Chinese officials and that the Customs Service ought to be judiciously dealt with; does not think anything could be done about opium, as action had been deferred too long and the native drug would drive the Indian production in a few years out of the market; Customs' service would collapse if there was a war with France and, if no war, England would see other powers contend for which is to direct it; China was not likely to declare war but, emboldened by France's hesitation, might yet do so; but even if it took centuries China would eventually have her way; Germany the only Power which knew what China could accomplish. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1750. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1839. vtls005332269 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from J. D. Campbell to Rendel, 1884, Oct. 11. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Seeks to show that Lord Granville had received Hart's telegram before the Times correspondent's telegram appeared, giving details of the interview between the American Minister and Li Hung Chang; Campbell had seen the French Ambassador to warn him of the activities of a young German Chinese Customs Official on leave from China for mental reasons, who had been writing pamphlets on the Tonquin question and who was the cause of rumours in the Paris papers that a German Receiver of Customs in China, Herr Kleinwachter, was to see Bismark to settle the indemnity; Waddington believed that there was a good chance of peace if the principle of an indemnity were acknowledged, but there was a difficulty in securing the faithful execution of engagements, as behind Li were the Yamen and the court intrigues; France would hold Kelung as a temporary pledge only; suggests that England should have recommended China to acknowledge the principle of indemnity, leaving open the question of the amount and nature of it, France possibly agreeing to accept certain commercial advantages on the Tonquin Frontier; with this information leaves Rendel to judge whether he could make any profitable use of Hart's last telegram. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1839. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	He had used the word 'shall' in the agreement merely to call attention to it and believed that a little gentle pressure from the other side might enable him to make a further modification, which gentle pressure was put in the form of a question, which brought forth a written explanation that it was not an obligation, but simply a future, establishing the intention of China to address herself when the time shall have come, to the cooperation of French industry, not excluding the industry of others, and meaning much the same as the Us article; the French text was binding, the meaning of which had been given to him and telegraphed to head quarters; he had succeeded in securing minor concessions, but trifling in comparison to this when it was considered that commercial advantages were to make up for the indemnity and Li was prepared to make concessions which would have given preference and priority. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1866. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1871-2. vtls005332328 ISYSARCHB74	File - Rendel to Lord Granville (press copy and draft), 1885, June 13. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Recalls that he had the previous Sept. approached him in Sir Robert Hart's name concerning the irregular war of reprisals between the French and Chinese in Tonkin and Formosa, which was also injurious to neutrals, with the risk that Britain might become implicated and that the Chinese Administration might break up, with the possibility that either Japan or Russia might pursue territorial projects; moreover, it was difficult for France to negotiate through regular diplomatic channels owing to personal incompatibilities of temper and questions involving the veracity of diplomatic agents and integrity of diplomatic documents, the difficulties being increased by the Chinese Administration with its separate viceroys, the central Foreign Affairs Board and the mysterious office of Censors; pays tribute to the way Granville had received Hart's suggestions through him and readily agreed that all communications between them should be secret and on a personal basis; Hart's strength was that he had the confidence of the Prince Regent and free access to the Tsung-li-Yamen, whose minds he could learn and influence, and was for China the most trusted and instructed of European intermediaries, but had it not been for the quasi-recognition which Granville had accorded him he would not on the one hand have acquired the necessary status among the Chinese and on the other the serious consideration of France; though Hart's preliminary proposals were without immediate result, yet it was Granville's intervention which gave France a safe diplomatic foothold in China; but Ferry was unwilling to close with China at the low ebb of her military prestige, preferring to wait for a military victory, which never came; it was the failure of all efforts in China itself to liberate a store ship requisite for the maintenance of the coast lights which brought Hart, represented by Campbell in London, into communication with Ferry; Ferry paid the penalty for this initiative; hitherto he had had Granville as a means of communication with Hart, but this was no longer the case; when the Langson reverse came, although Ferry actually had peace in his pocket, he was unable to stave off the fall by producing it, because he dared not rest on Hart's responsibility; Ferry's distrust needless, as peace protocol was at once signed by the new government followed by the treaty in Paris; of great significance to England that the treaty had been settled for China by an Englishman so experienced in and devoted to British interests in China as Hart, thus ensuring that the treaty would not be injurious to the interests of Britain or of any other neutral power; reference to the appointment of Hart as Minister at Peking. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1871-2. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Observations on his letter to Granville (1871); 1) he had had an audience with Ferry, 11 Jan. 1885, with reference to the capture of the light house tender 'Feihoo', and been courteously received; 2) he again saw Ferry 24 Jan. and at Hart's request asked him if he would allow the general situation to be mentioned and Ferry authorised him to inform Hart that he could only pronounce on a proposition emanating directly from the Tsung-li-Yamen, which he indicated might come to him from Granville; 3) Ferry, having been satisfied by subsequent telegrams that he was negotiating directly with the Tsung-li-Yamen through Hart, resigned on 30 March before receiving the Tsung-li-Yamen's reply to his last proposals; at a moment of uncertainty in consequence of the Langson incident, the Chinese thinking that the French might wish to retrieve the reverse and the French that the Chinese might be encouraged to go on with the war, hence the vote for 250 millions credit; 4) on 31 March and 1 April he received telegrams accepting Ferry's last proposals 5) although still in office Ferry did not wish to bind his successor, so the President gave the necessary authority to act; 6) on 3 April he received a telegram from Hart instructing him to write to Granville 'stating where we are now and explaining last three weeks negotiations: add intervention still undesirable' which he interpreted as an appeal to Granville for help; 7) on 4 April protocol signed by Billot and himself so he did not write to Granville; an enclosed memo (1875a) in French drawn up for Ferry would explain all about the signing of the protocol; the 'Feihoo' was released on 9 April before the treaty was signed; queries sum of £20,000 mentioned by Rendel. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1875. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Granville's friendly offices were hot haste and repeatedly invoked by Hart; the Langson incident had added to Ferry's embarrassment; had French arms gained any conspicuous advantage Campbell might have been thrown over, and if the reverse had happened, Ferry felt that China could as easily repudiate Hart. 1754. vtls005332338 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart,	1885, July 14.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Placing on record the part he played in the settlement of the dispute between France and China over Tonking; used the unwarranted seizure of the Chinese Customs vessel Feihoo to open negotiations through Campbell with Ferry in Paris concerning the question of Tonking; negotiations known only to Lord Granville and Rendel till 14 March, when a telegram mistakenly sent in plain English to the effect that an Imperial decree had approved the articles sent through Campbell, and empowering the latter to sign the protocol, as the Chinese commissioner; this revelation forced France to go ahead faster and in order to test Hart's position directed her minister at Berlin and London to attempt negotiations through the Chinese ministers Hsu and Tsheng, of which the Yamen, after consultation with Hart, took no notice; but the Ferry Cabinet required that Hart's powers should be communicated through some French official to the French Government, so the required communications was sent through Li Hung Chang, Consul Ristelhueber and Minister Patenotre; on 30 March Hart sent the final telegram accepting all proposals and authorising Campbell to sign; on the same day the French Ministry resigned; was alarmed by the fall of ministry and also by the Chinese victories of 22 and 24 March and the retaking of Langson, which might have had the effect of making both France and China continue fighting, but both sides were willing to proceed with the negotiations; after some hesitation the French President authorised Billot to sign the French protocol on 4 April and on 5 April Hart took news of it to the Yamen; other people were so savage because they had not themselves arranged the protocol that there was a danger they would destroy it when committed to their care, so Hart and Campbell arranged that the detailed and final treaty should be negotiated in the same way as the Protocol, i.e. by the French Foreign Office and the Chinese Yamen through Hart and Campbell and that the plenipotentiaries named by the Governments to negotiate should not negotiate at all, but merely sign; this was a hazardous proceeding only justified by complete success in the face of possible French demands and the new Minister, de Freycinet's, suspiciousness and excitability could not be easily secured; nevertheless they managed to keep off fresh demands, smooth rough language and, most difficult of all, get the wedge in so far as to make everyone wish it were all in and on 9 June Li and Patenotre signed; Hart agreed with a remark of a member of the diplomatic corps to the effect that 'there was nothing in it', which was its great merit; had it been left to Li and Patenotre an attempt would have been made to put in many stipulations, mainly of value to France and so risked the previous success; France got Tonking and China gave what it had already given in the Tientsin treaty of

	1884, not a penny of indemnity was paid and the immediate evacuation of Formosa and the Pescadores clearly stipulated for; pays tribute to the part of the Empress in these proceedings who had considered, talked out and approved of every important step; peace had been secured and France had acquired as white an elephant as ever covetousness was blessed with; but trouble looming up owing to Russia's claim to a protectorate over Corea, which China could not allow. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1754. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1755. vtls005332350 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart, 1885, Aug. 30. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Outlines the anxieties of past 15 months, the failure of the OBC, where there was a considerable deposit of Customs' funds, the Langson affair, his failure to arrange affairs at Shanghai, Peking and London, matters being made more difficult, as instead of Prince Kung and his party, who had had 20 years experience of foreign affairs, he had to deal with Prince Ching and his associates, who were new to the work and to himself; had decided not to go to the Legation; the post had a certain glitter, which would probably give him a baronetcy, which he desired for the sake of his son, Bruce, and would give him (Hart) a chance of doing some useful work; but his work in the Customs Service was not completed and his known connection with the Legation made it impossible for him to take the steps he could have taken had he been leaving China for ever; probable that what he had done would be undone to the great detriment of commercial and international interests and to the personal injury of the entire Customs staff; Chinese Government too would prefer him to remain in his present post; news from Europe showed that the political situation was easier and felt that he could be more useful as the trusted Inspector-General of Customs than in the position of British Minister; only regrets causing Lord Granville vexation by his decision and the loss of the baronetcy for Bruce.

1756. vtls005332376 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart, 1886, March 15. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Tonking supplementary work had been heavy, but French good humoured and had not let the Chinese Officials irritate or make them impatient, with the result that the opponents of peace were being foiled and the work of delimitation at the frontier and negotiations of frontier trade regulations at Tientsin, though delayed by stupid opposition, proceeding satisfactorily; French would get as much of Tonking as they could take and, though verbose, there would be very little in the trade regulations; remains to be seen whether they would benefit France, but is certain that they would not do any harm to anybody else; the expedition against Burmah one of the quickest and most successful ever, but the negotiations of the Foreign Office and India Office with China had dragged, with every additional delay tending to increase China's idea of what must be done to satisfy her; Hart had done his best to smooth matters for the Indian agent, W. Macaulay, in Tibet, but China much afraid of results of intercourse there, though the idea of safety in intercourse rather than in seclusion was gaining ground; remarks on the astonishment of Ito when informed of the peace protocol between China and France, as he had himself signed a similar protocol with Li; papers had been discovered which showed that the French were supposed to be tempting the Japanese to join them against China and arrangements were being made with certain pro-Japanese Coreans to assist; on the departure of von Mollendorf from Corea he had appointed an American, Merrill, as Chief Commissioner of Customs and was sending out Schoenicke, a German, Piry, a Frenchman and Creagh, an Englishman, to take charge of customs houses at Jenchuan, Fusan and

	Guensan; in that way Chinese and Korean customs were being welded together; Corea part and parcel of China much more than any other of China's tributary states and if it should disappear from the map, Corea should be incorporated in China; both China and Corea really relieved about the British occupation of Port Hamilton, but both protest for the sake of appearance to show Russia that they did not acquiesce in the seizure of territory by Russia's enemy; Hart had done his best to prevent China from bothering the English Government too much about the place, but also thinks it was a pity that the place was ever taken, as its protection would cost more than its intrinsic worth; but does not think England could safely withdraw at the moment; China had been enjoying a quiet and prosperous time since France sheathed the sword and quotes figures of increase of customs' revenue, 1883-5; surprised by the calm way in which the Chinese suffered misfortune and by the manner in which, once the tornado was passed, they set to work again without complaint; reference to Rendel's parliamentary success; Hart had prepared a memo for the Yamen, which he handed in as the German Syndicate was landing at Tientsin, to the effect that China should go to the best market for loans, invite tenders and avoid entangling concessions and extraneous conditions; had relied on good general advice to upset private and mischievous plans, but he dared not go in as a violent partisan for England and against any other power; talk of loans and railways chiefly on the part of foreigners, who wanted China to submit to bleeding in those connections; thinks the day of rail was coming nearer; having fought the French successfully, hoped to be able to clip the wings of even fiercer eagles; advice he had given the Yamen accorded with Rendel's views and the strong leaders in the Times, but he was not omnipotent; references to the establishment of the Chinese National Post and of an Anglo-Chinese School at Tientsin, set up under the patronage of the great Li Chang Tung; both these projects would do good to the Customs Service, China and England, and influence of the school would be pro-English; hoped to go home for a rest and were it not for his Irish rents gradually being legislated into tatters believed he would stay home; Lang had arrived at Tientsin and hoped he would do good work now that there was an Admiralty in existence. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1756. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1760. vtls005332384 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart, 1886, April 30. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:          Outlines the provisions of an 'additional article' under which the opium duties and likin, amounting to 110 taels per pecul should be collected simultaneously by the Maritime Customs before the opium left bond, signed by the Marquis Tseng and the Marquis of Salisbury, though terms had originally been agreed by Lord Granville before he left office; Hart believes that Tseng should have asked for assistance in carrying out the article which required an arrangement to prevent the opium carrying trade from passing into the hands of non British treaty-power merchants, who were not bound by the British additional articles and an arrangement by which the enhanced profits of smuggling would not be supported by Hong Kong's position as a free port so close to the Chinese coast; to prevent this Hart proposed that India should make it a law that opium should not be exported except in vessels flying the flags of powers which accepted the additional articles and that Hong Kong should make a law which should subject opium on arrival to special control, and so prevent Hong Kong smugglers from running opium; refers also to his proposals to settle Hong Kong-Canton relations, so that Canton should not find fault with Hong Kong as a smuggling centre and Hong Kong had no reason to complain of Canton for interfering with local trade, etc.; asks for Rendel's assistance in the matter, as Hong Kong was the concern of the Colonial Secretary, Lord Granville; Governor of Hong Kong could either obstruct or support Legation policy; if his action tended to undermine Legation influence (by working on the Peking through the Canton authorities), or if he obstructed or declined to support Legation action through even an [u]nconscious propensity to assist independence of desire to show superiority, the result would damage the working power of both; Governor and Minister ought always to pull together; if he, Hart, were appointed Governor he could do good international work in that position for a year or two; asks if Rendel knew the new Governor, Sir William Hart Dyke. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]:          Preferred citation: 1760. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location:          ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
1761. vtls005332385 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart, 1886, May 7. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content:          Objections to his hulk proposal by the Hongkongites 1) the presence of Chinese hulks, which could be met by proposing that Hong Kong should itself provide British flag-flying hulks, but China to supply funds for cost and maintenance, which would work equally well for them and free Hong Kong from the bugbear of the Chinese flag flying over Chinese officials stationed and at work there 2) the rule providing for the collection of duty and likin on opium taken to any store in Hong Kong other than the Customs store, i.e., opium for use in Hong Kong and for transport to San Francisco, pleading that they could not be expected to assist in taxing what was used elsewhere, which could be met by a proposal to pay to Hong Kong for its local revenue whatever was collected on opium which did not go to China; these were

	the only points on which he wished Rendel's assistance at headquarters; England had consented to the simultaneous levy of duty and likin at 110 taels per chest and unless China was given cooperation or a free hand at Hong Kong, the loss by smuggling would be immense; a non British official had hinted to China that England had not negotiated in good faith, knowing that China could not collect the 110 tael without assistance, so Hart was anxious that England should go out of her way a little to let China see that everything possible would be done to enable China to collect the revenue agreed in the article; the hulk proposal was the one which would collect the largest revenue at the least expense to China and the least inconvenience to traders; the sentimental objection of the anti-Chinese flag could be swept aside on reading Palmerston's instructions to Sir Henry Pottinger, 31 May 1841, if the hulk system was not conceded, the profit by successful smuggling would be so great that the customs would be hard pressed to do customs' work quickly; all privileges at the port would have to be abolished, which would affect the purses of every shipowner interested in the China trade and necessitate increased blockade precautions round Hong Kong itself and stop the free coming and going of a native craft; hulk system would do away with the blockade which Hong Kong folk so anxious to see disappear; but some wealthy merchants at Hong Kong, the owners of river steamers plying between Hong Kong, Canton and Macao would object because the blockade drove business out of Chinese bottoms into their river steamers. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1761. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Morley's request; states that he was not retiring from indolence or timidity; reminds him of past achievements in carrying his seat in 1880 as a virgin fortress, at an expenditure double that of the next largest in the Kingdom; in 1885 he had held 120 meetings and attended 60 within 6 weeks in most difficult country, 770 square miles, almost the largest south of the Tweed; he had spent £14,000 in six years, losing far more by quitting his business; difficulties increased by the fact that apart from Humphreys-Owen there was no resident Liberal Landowner worth so calling, not one Liberal clergyman and, on account of the 5 small boroughs, no manufacturing and mining industry to leaven the agricultural vote; moreover all the cream of the Welsh

	side of the county belonged to Wynnstay, while Powisland dominated the English side; he had the two 'Princes' in Wales against him, not to speak of the Londonderries at Machynlleth, the millionaire Naylor and all their courts of petty gentry; states that he could only hold the seat by extraordinary exertions and could only bring a majority to the poll by contact with humbler folk of when he could only in one place collect more than 20 or 30 voters at a time; concludes that it would not be reasonable to blame him if he then withdrew upon grounds affecting his moral position. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 894-5. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	adequate salaries to all Chinese officials lighten the real but not the legitimate burdens of the people and kill the dishonesty of the official world by removing the official poverty, which caused it to grow; hoped that the customs revenue would amount in 1887 to 20,000,000 taels as opposed to 5,000,000 in 1861; discusses the possibility of his retirement to make way for a younger man; the trip which the Emperor's father made last May to Port Arthur had had excellent results, since it made the chief adviser of the Throne see with his own eyes foreign men and ships and other novelties; believes the Anglo-Chinese treaty re Burmah was wise, but the delay in putting Burmah in order was likely to fire the frontier and force China into action of one kind or another; it was essential for China that Corea should remain a tributary or be incorporated and governed as a Chinese province; Japan would resent incorporation, but without it Corea would be subjected to Russian intrigues; Corea's customs were now being worked by Hart's men; discusses the settlement reached in the matter of the Nagasaki riot; was doing his best to keep China's hands peace-wards in the dispute over the Tonking delimitation; Port Arthur, in the process of being fortified by German engineers, had been put up to competition and a French syndicate had got the contract; China now in position to borrow at 5 1/2% interest; the railway contract had been given to the American firm of Russell &amp; Co. and not to Krupp; report of an understanding between Germany and China in the event of fighting with France, which would make Germany master of the East, pointing out what millions of Chinese troops led by German officers could do. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1762. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1764. vtls005332445 ISYSARCHB74	File - Rendel to Sir Robert Hart (press copy), 1887, Sept. 6. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Compliments him on his letters, the last of which he had shown to James Bryce, who with his friends, John Morley and Frederic Harrison, were the men best qualified to appreciate the power and play of his pen, not forgetting also Trevelyan, Lord Granville and Grant-Duff; considers that political feeling over the Irish Home Rule question was running too high, Society having, for once, Science and Culture as well as the Church on its side; as a result of the 'boycotting' of Gladstonians, the remnant was drawing closer together and he himself had been admitted to unexpected intimacy, having had a 11/2 hours' discussion with Gladstone at Swansea about an important phase of the party situation and he now felt at ease with all members of the Gladstone cabinet; believes that the Home Rule proposals were less important than their friends or opponents represented, but while not completely solving the difficulty something had to be done and Home Rule was the more prudent remedy; had believed that when Salisbury turned out Gladstone, by his tacit agreement with Parnell, the matter was settled; but when Gladstone snatched the lead by making definite proposals and alarmed the country, Salisbury then determined to oppose Gladstone in order to secure for his party a fair run of power; but Salisbury had never 'burnt his ships' as the Liberal Unionists had done; was still only a question of which party would grant Home Rule or whether both should combine; Irish Home Rule might be the beginning of the end of the British Empire, but it had got to come; saw evil in resisting it because 1) it made party severances coincident with social severances 2) it brought on the land question with pernicious speed; through the Scotch crofter and Welsh petty farmer, the mischief was being transferred from Ireland to Britain; there was no more hope of the English landed system standing up against effectual agrarian combination than of the English manufacturing system ever shaking itself free of the stifling control of the trade unions; yet the Tories to retain power were unconsciously compelling the attention of the newly enfranchised agricultural interest to the use and to the power of this weapon of combination and training them in all the reasoning by which the patriarchal system, hitherto so successful in England, might be denounced or upset; he was at least as much afraid of consequences of making Home Rule the sport of party as of Home Rule itself; did not believe that measures limiting the powers of the House of Commons would necessarily injure the Empire and Unity; while Ireland might become a focus of American or Papist designs and might produce when independent a permanent anti-British party, he would prefer this to happen than that she should continue in the present condition of veiled rebellion; but he was confident that Great Britain and Ireland could become real friends; Irish Home Rulers were being enthusiastically received in English constituencies; the religious issue had had no alienating effect and the British people had taken up the position that the wrongs of Ireland were in some sense their own; household franchise granted to the four nations of Britain had united the people in a cause which they believed to be popular, which fusion of feeling would do more for the Empire than by the suppression of Home Rule; the sorrowful part was that democracy would have a signal and unalloyed triumph and it would be either Tory-Democracy or democratic Radicalism, which would settle the surrender; whigs and moderates had missed their chance and we should come out of the business with the loss of the valuable intermingling of classes and interests which had kept the party lines from being dangerously coincident with those of class or interest; in these views he was alone among his natural friends; all the Academic Liberals were Unionists, so were the great majority of the Church, the Bench, Literature, Science, Art, Journalism, Society and Villadom, which made people believe that there was a sacerdotalism of Science, Priestcraft and Culture at enmity with popular causes and interests; while the Upper Classes were all for the honour and glory of the British Empire, the lower classes were all for the welfare and happiness of the people; the British people would still fight for their hearths, possibly for their altars and their flag, but did not believe they would do so for mere Empire and still less for Supremacy; the British people would not pay the price of conscription to retain India, or go to war with France, Germany or the USA on any question concerned with the colonies; considered Hart's idea of a Federation of the English speaking peoples, having the USA for its centre, magnificent, but would the USA accept any part in the burden of governing 200 million Indians autocratically, and would the USA or even the Colonies accept the British engagements in the Mediterranean? Does not believe that England had the resources to enter any vast conjunction with peoples sprung from her loins; because he honestly believed she was insolvent;

	Democracy, beginning with Ireland, might for a time shake the prestige of the British Crown in Europe, but an attempt to argue it out of its tendencies and convictions or to fight them to the last was to waste time and opportunity; the people had been given power and were receiving as fast as possible general and political education and much could be done to guide them if they went with them; most of the holy horror and scorn of continental neighbours due not to sorrow over Britain's approaching discomfiture and disruption, but to anxiety over the triumph of democracy; instances the cases of Germany (Alsace &amp; Lorraine), Austria-Hungary and Russia; some people considered that centripetal forces were in the ascendant, but he was confident that there was much to be said for the centrifugal; believed that Hart was justified in his strictures on English education. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1764. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Claims that the Picton cum Osborne Morgan strategy had given propulsion to the Tithe Bill which A. Balfour had himself not hoped to carry; now the bill should be harried in committee; they should criticise the small owner and occupier clause (3. sec. 2), which made him the statutory tenant to the receiver of tithe, enabling distraint to be levied on the freeholder, as such a tenant, who could be sued in the courts, made bankrupt and turned out of land, in short making the parson the landlord of the freeholder, with all the landlord's rights and remedies, adding 'if this does not stir up the Welshmen nothing will'; similarly in the case of the tenant, the tithe levied by the landlord will be recoverable by distraint, action, judgment and ejection. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 921. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Believes Liberal majority small, but party in good heart and would fight well behind Gladstone; Scotland had gone to pieces over the Church and Wales should come first; radical bills should be sent to the Lords on land, licensing and local government; some bills should be introduced by private members and backed by the Government; Scots should be allowed to thresh out their own bills by themselves; the old Liberalism must bend a little before the new; Liberals lacked the overwhelming preponderance to which they had been accustomed; in general elections centres of influence were weak as compared with the Tories; more enthusiasm would be roused when main attack on Ireland is launched; bills should be introduced for giving 'the unearned increment' of the future of building lands to the local authorities, for giving great powers to local authorities, for Disestablishment in Wales, for payment of members and registration reform. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1228. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Frederick Cavendish, 1894, Sept. 26. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Defends the Church in Wales against the charge of 'proselytism', if coercion or bribery was implied in the term; Church could not be blamed if the Clergy won converts by their earnest work and religious influence in their schools and parishes; does not believe that earnest Welshmen like the Welsh Bishops would condone bribery and coercion exercised against children, and is at a loss to understand why more board schools were not set up in Wales, if undue pressure were indeed exercised in the Church Schools and so keep the 'kidnapping parson' out; surely it was not unreasonable that Church people should be employed as teachers in Church Schools; if children were compelled to attend Church, it did not follow that they would be driven into confirmation. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 961. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
733. vtls005332975 ISYSARCHB74	File - Rendel to Lord Spencer (copy), 1894, Oct 20. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Advocating that the Government purchase of specialised war material such as the hydraulic mountings of heavy guns afloat should be purchased from a single source, though conceding that more advantage would be obtained from encouraging competition in the manufacture of such things as armour plates, marine engines, small arms and common projectiles; presses the claims of the Elswick factory which had no rival in the manufacture of guns and hydraulic engines; instances Krupps as an example of the concentration of the German armament manufacture. Rendel could understand the frank admission of political considerations in the case of Government manufacturing establishments, as, since they exist, they must be kept alive. Moreover, as they work for the Government only, they do not take work the private manufacturer should have and create a rival for him in outside markets. He could even accept, though with regret, the considerations which led to the giving of an order to an Irish (unfortunately Orange) yard for a cruiser on special terms and without competition, but this was the extreme limit and Government orders ought not to be thrown as a sop to this or that political constituency. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 733. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Agrees to an extent with the arguments of his letter (733), but considers it important to distribute, when possible without loss of excellence of manufacture and without direct or indirect financial loss, large orders given by a Government Department, a view which went beyond political considerations, of which Rendel quoted an instance, but which had not occurred in his time. He was not prepared to say anything more concerning his decision about gun mountings at present; believes that the necessity for Government Establishments might involve political influences, but their existence was an Imperial necessity. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 734. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1765. vtls005333003 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Robert Hart (copy),	1895, April 7.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: States that had it been in his power he would have had China as an ally of England and stopped Japan before she crossed the Yalu river; China was sore over what she considered the desertion of her friends and Japan almost as sore over the good advice given her; believes that Europe had blundered and that the next century would see the East rolling the West back; refers to the change of attitude of the Japanese press from adulation of England to hostility, even sketching out a future crusade in which Japan, after settling Formosa, would proceed to restoring Hong Kong to 'her' Chinese Empire and then free the Indian princes from foreign tyranny; on the pretext of preparing to meet Russia and reform Corea, armies were mustered and instead she made an unprovoked attack on China; Japan had succeeded in her aim of crippling China and of craftily neutralising the Western Powers; her aim was to lead the East in war, in

	commerce and in manufacture; Japan would in future strain every nerve to oust England, while China, pacific and undeveloped, would pass more and more under Japanese domination; speaks of Japan's designs upon India; nothing would divert Japan from her purpose, except the intervention of the Russian fleet; 30 years had not changed Japan's 'innerness'; peace conditions would open all China, but would also force her to become a manufacturing country to England's disadvantage; terms of treaty also so craftily arranged that a breach might at any moment be pleaded and further conquest effected, while they pressed so heavily on China that freedom of action was handcuffed; doubts whether he could do anything effective about the labour of reconstruction in the impoverished country; states in a P. S. that the purpose of his telegram was not to borrow money, but wanted foreign protection to prevent the Japanese seizing a railway line and had hoped to put the railway in English hands, though did not desire a monopoly; reflections on the suicide of Ting at Wei-Hai-Wei and blames him for not sinking every transport the morning they anchored in Yung Ching bay. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1765. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1173. vtls005333101 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Lord Cobham,	1897, March 18.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Discussing the draft report of the Commission on Agricultural Depression; he had done his best to minimise Rendel's objection that the report led up to bimetallism or protection, as a natural corollary; it was impossible to avoid saying that with falling prices more land would go out of cultivation and, although that would be a lesser evil than Protection or Bimetallism, it would not be possible to get the Commission to say so; by regulating the subject to separate memoranda ample freedom would be given to all parties to express their views and correct the impression that they were veiled bimetallists; he was expecting a paragraph from Rendel on the mortgage question; he had himself put in a word or two limiting disbelief in 'occupying ownership' as a remedy for the worst districts, but feared that the evidence precluded making any definite recommendation on the subject, except possibly in Wales, on which a paragraph from Rendel would not be objected to. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1173. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

378. vtls005333144 ISYSARCHB74	File - Rendel to W. E. Gladstone,	1897, Sept. 14.
	Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Discusses the use of steel in building construction in Britain and contrasts the production of steel for their own use by the Elswick Co. with the mass production of Carnegie's works, with reflections on the latter's methods; gives details of the organisation and men employed at Elswick, which amounted to more than the number employed in the whole of the Government ordnance factories and dockyards put together, and states that they were building a larger tonnage of warships than the British Government and all of their own design; discusses the difficulty of converting Gladstone's holding of ordinary shares into preference shares and of getting a large block of shares like his sold; states that there were 3,100 shareholders, some holding as little as a £ share; is prepared to take Gladstone's holding of shares, but should like a director's qualification of £2,000 to remain in Harry's name; advises him to hold on to shares, as prospects were good, though the following year's dividends would bear the strain of the strike. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 378. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1309. vtls005333309 ISYSARCHB74	File - Rendel to Dr Thomas Hodgkin (copy),  Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Rejecting his appeal (see 1308); maintains that on the score of profit and loss between Newcastle and Elswick, it was not Elswick which was the debtor; but his view chiefly determined by the fact that he had for 20 years been closely connected with education in Wales and had seen a complete system built up there during a period when the Durham College of Science had made a comparatively slow advance; the Welsh had thriven despite the lack of extraneous money or assistance; if the people of Newcastle really cared for this type of education they would not let it drop for mere lack of money; more harm than good would result in finding the money in big sums from the outside; Welsh education was a stable and national possession of Wales because it sprung from the spontaneous love of the whole people; like Welsh religion it was essentially a voluntary and popular system. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1309. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1899, July 1.
1310. vtls005333310 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Dr Thomas Hodgkin,  Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Stating that it was not the intention to ask a few large givers to take the whole burden of the Durham Science College on their shoulders, letting the rest of the community go free; they were hoping to raise £30,000 in small sums, but to do this it was advisable to raise £20,000 in four figure donations; thanks him for the hint as to what had been done in Wales. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1310. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1899, July 5.

1611. vtls005333337 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Philip Stanhope, 1901, Feb. 12. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Though, like Rendel, sick of the Liberal Party in its parlous position, did not intend entirely to lay down his arms; though Campbell-Bannerman himself sound, was not strong enough to switch the machine in the right direction, while on every side he was surrounded by men whose Liberalism he had failed to discover; with Fowler and Grey on his right and Asquith on his left, his position unenviable, but thinks that Herbert Gladstone should not have trickled to passing influences of the hour; the incessant intriguing a sorry business; misfortune that Harcourt too old and Morley too timid to give a strong lead; undoubtedly the popularity of the 'detestable and flagitious war' on the wane; death of Queen had given rise to not over encouraging phase of public feeling, the prevailing sentiment seemingly an enthusiastic delight at the prospect of increased ostentation and display during the new reign; vast increase of wealth had given rise to an overpowering vulgarity, giving riches and luxury a commanding place - German Jews, Chicago millionaires and self advertising capitalists of all kinds had found in England a sort of earthly paradise in which they could disport themselves to full advantage, and thus the old Liberalism had lost its hold upon the people, but only for a time, he hoped; most sickening feature to be found in the New Religion, which endeavoured to put the Christian faith on a cash basis; it was then not a question of the good done, but of how much money could be ostentatiously raised by various denominations for the self glorification of Messrs Perks &amp; Co. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1611. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1114. vtls005333345 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from J. Bryce, 1901, July 18. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Criticism of Grey's attitude; believes that the old principles of Liberalism as imbibed, 1845- 65, had very little hold on the new generation, but cannot understand the failure to see that the diplomacy of Joseph Chamberlain and the war was one of the deadliest blows ever dealt at the true strength of the Empire, but there was no word in defence of Rosebery's letter in any quarter; Wales had shown great sympathy with liberty and nationality, leaving Scotland far behind, adding 'whether it is Highland regiments or missionary misrepresentations that have done the mischief is hard to tell'; believes with Humphreys-Owen that Rendel should deliver his views somewhere. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1114. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

1607. vtls005333355 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Herbert Spencer,	1902, Jan. 4.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Approves of his draft letter to Carnegie seeking to enlist his sympathy for Welsh charities, but advises him to condense it; has no doubt that Wales had been much ill-used by England, calling John Bull 'an arrant bully'; but the facts enumerated, showing how much Wales had done for herself, formed a strong reason for receiving aid. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1607. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
1520. vtls005333356 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Lady Augusta Noel,	1902, Jan. 8.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Feels that her days on earth are numbered and refers tenderly to the last illness of Lady Bowen. In pencil. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1520. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
1521. vtls005333357 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Ernest Noel,	1902, Jan. 8.
	Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Thanking him for information about the work of naval architects; fears that his rector's son had not the high mathematical attainments necessary for that profession; refers also to his wife's illness.

884. vtls005333358 ISYSARCHB74	File - Sir Ughtred Kay-Shuttleworth to Mrs Maud Gladstone, 1902, Feb. 26. Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Criticises Rosebery's Liverpool speech and praises Campbell-Bannerman's Leicester speech, rallying Liberals to the true faith; considers that Rosebery's action upon it was almost as unfortunate and ill-timed as his previous choice of Gladstone's speech about Armenia as his excuse for giving up the leadership and that the party would be mean to desert the leader who had filled the thankless post for over 3 years with so much consistency, tenacity, good temper and courage. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 884. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
152. vtls005333359 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Alfred Thomas, 1902, March 3. Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Thanking him for a letter, extracts from which had appeared in the press; pays a tribute to his old chief and predecessor and welcomes any advice or suggestions. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 152. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)
1587. vtls005333360 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from C. S. Roundell, 1902, March 6. Natur a chynnwys   Scope and content: Regrets the departure of Lord Salisbury, when there was such a need of men of highest capacity; little hope of cooperation between Rosebery and the Liberal Party, but sees the absence of any substantial difference of opinion as not being the determining factor in the case; even if Rosebery were to dominate the party it would not be the Liberal Party or principles as understood by Mr G.; reference to the decided and definite character of Spencer's speech at Eastbourne; there would be overt signs of discord concerning the war in the present session, but expects the rank and file to stand by Campbell-Bannerman, who, however, was not capable of leadership in the higher sense of the word, such as was the case with Gladstone, Salisbury, or even Rosebery, who had a magnetic personality; possibly some reconstruction of parties would come about, but there were the conflicting pretensions of Rosebery and Chamberlain; probably foreign politics and problems arising from them would determine the future constitution of parties; refers to visit to Sir Charles Hotcham at Portsmouth, who said that the operations on Whale Island were the best things in the Navy; believes the Japanese treaty a serious new departure making against agreement with Russia. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1587. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location:

219. vtls005333361 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Lord Kenyon,  Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Thanking him for a cheque in response to an appeal for some cause. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 219. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1902, March 8.
885. vtls005333362 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Sir Ughtred Kay-Shuttleworth,  Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Referring to the advances made by Campbell-Bannerman and Spencer to Rosebery after the latter's Chesterfield speech, believing that cooperation was possible with him on the vital question of peace in South Africa, but had met with a chilly response followed by the Liverpool speech, seeming to abandon Liberal principles fought for of a century; praises Campbell-Bannerman's Leicester speech and deplors Rosebery's letter on the following day in the Times; does not understand the adherence of Asquith and Grey to Rosebery, Haldane, Pirks & Co., 'the intriguers'; must be thankful that they had such men as C.-B., Lord Spencer and John Morley, who appealed to the Liberal conscience more effectively than any man since Gladstone; believes that the rank and file will stick to their principles in preference to the 'clean slate'; strictures on Rosebery's conduct towards the Liberal Party; he is not sure that Rendel was right in thinking that the old order of parties was gone; believes that C.-B. would capture the imagination of the progressive electors. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 885. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1902, March 8.
791. vtls005333363 ISYSARCHB74	File - Letter from Lord Welby,  Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Is unable to go to stay at Thorence at Easter as he did not wish to travel in the herd with the hooligans of the House of Commons, and also owing to his duties as chairman of the LCC Finance Committee; reference to Chamberlain's policy of grab and strictures and on Rosebery as the 'author of all mischief'; regrets that they would have to remain under the shadow 'of Joe and the pot-bellies' for an unlimited time. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 791. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1902, March 16.

E. Ellis in Bala; reflects on the motives and actions of public men and refers to the efforts leading politicians had made to enlist his support and the Welsh vote, instancing Chamberlain, but he had always sacrificed personal claims for advancement to his concern for the interests of Wales; he had made a tacit agreement with Gladstone in 1872 for a suspensory bill, a Land Commission and University for Wales, the first two of which would probably not have been achieved, had he wanted and accepted office in 1892; refers also to Liberal Party dissensions, placing most of the blame on Rosebery, but regretting that Rosebery, Harcourt and John Morley had not agreed to serve under Lord Spencer. Though in some respects critical of Morley he praises his honesty and humanity and is particularly pleased that he should visit Bala at Lloyd George's instance, remarking that 'Tom Ellis stands for new born Wales and Lloyd George carries the torch'. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 2. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Campbell concerning the peace negotiations between France and China; he had informed Rendel, who had left Paris the previous Sunday morning, in confidence that negotiations were being continued through them, that assurances had been given to Hart and the Yamen that France had no intention of keeping the Pescadores, that she would loyally carry out the terms of the protocol and evacuate Formosa soon after the signing of the Peace Treaty and that reinforcements sent to Tonking were merely to maintain order. Information given to Rendel for benefit of Granville. France had demanded preference for constructing a certain number of miles of railway, but by reference to the most favoured nation clause of other treaties and by appealing to the railway clause in the United States treaty (copy 1914a) he had succeeded in getting this preferential right removed. The clause referred to railways only, and although stronger than in the United States treaty did not give a monopoly or exclusive privilege to France and by the most favoured nation clause other nations could join in an enterprise where there was room enough for all; what he feared was that time and circumstances might throw the negotiations with Patenotre into Li's hands. Li had on several occasions made overtures concerning railways as one of the bases of peace. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1914. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

681. vtls005333799 ISYSARCHB74	File - Notes by Rendel of conversations with John Morley, who was staying with him as his guest at the Château de ... 1894, Dec. 21-25. Natur a chynnwys / Scope and content: Notes by Rendel of conversations with John Morley, who was staying with him as his guest at the Château de Thorenc, Cannes. Refers to Morley's successful tenure as Irish Secretary for 21/2 years and his exhausting work in framing the Irish Land bill. Efforts had to be made to win the support of the 100 Irish representatives in the Lords if the bill was to become law, even if it passed the Commons with Ulster support, and instances the Duke of Devonshire's passionate speech in the Lords on the Evicted Tenants bill, as an indication of the strength of the landlords' opposition. Morley was relying on the chance which Ulster defections and T. W Russel's help afforded in effecting an arrangement between the parties. Rendel thinks that Morley's physical collapse was due to his being disheartened. Morley thought that Home Rule was for the time being dead and anticipated that the Tory majority would be 70 - 100 at the next election, which would mean the disintegration of the Liberal Party which would not endure the fissiparous effects of its overdrawn programme and the relaxation of discipline which follows loss of office and accompanies opposition. Rosebery, even if he had been a successful premier, could not lead the party in opposition, as the Leader must be in the Commons. Harcourt would not accept the burden of this work without the office of leader. Refers to the discontent felt in the Irish party at Rosebery's 'predominant partner' speech. The Irish felt that it was not a 'Home Rule' cabinet, a view which Morley endorsed with bitterness. He considered that Rosebery's most serious blunder was his melodramatic

flinging down of the gauntlet to the Lords. Spoke of disagreement in the Cabinet, in which Rosebery was a second chamber man, whereas Harcourt, Asquith and Morley and some lesser men were single chamber men. Complains of the lack of a Cabinet plan, which was essential for any middle course or interim step, but no plan could avoid showing the radical difference in the Cabinet on the main issue. Morley was also disheartened at the way in which the Leaders of the Liberal Party yield to cries and demands in which they do not believe and in which the country was not behind them. Instances the 8 hour bill, in which only Acland and, to a lesser degree, Asquith believed and even criticised Gladstone in giving encouragement to the 8 hour day deputation; believed that the Liberal Party was too far ahead for the mass of its supporters and predicted that people like Dilke were waiting to take advantage of the situation as soon as they were in opposition. They discussed G. Shaw Lefevre, who was the first in 1877 to appreciate the Irish situation. Believed that Irish Disestablishment was not enough and was right in his views about the special character of the agrarian question, which needed Parnell's hatching of a few murders before Gladstone produced the ill-drawn land act of 1881. Shaw Lefevre had made a fatal mistake in not taking the Irish Secretaryship after Trevelyan, on the somewhat comical grounds that his wife, Lady Constance, did not approve of the land act. No doubt he did not like serving under Spencer plus coercion. Reference to the career of Sir G. O. Trevelyan, who used to tell Lord Spencer that he had claims to the succession to the leadership of the Liberal Party, which was not then unreasonable in view of his backing and literary and political successes and recounts anecdotes of scathing attacks made on him in 1887 by Chamberlain and Plunkett. Morley believed that no Liberal Government then cared whether he was in it or not. Morley considered Hartington a much better sort of Whig Aristocrat than Palmerston and believed there was a genuine ring in Lord John Russel's liberalism. They then discussed Gladstone's view of posthumous fame and Rendel contrasts the differing attitudes of Disraeli, Morley, Chamberlain and Gladstone to things posthumous. Morley expressed a wish to have one good talk before he died with Chamberlain who, had he remained a Liberal, would have succeeded to the leadership of the party. He had many good qualities, but agreed with Rendel's remark that he set pilotage above course. A new current and an unforeseen shoal set him off on another tack. Quoted as an example of Chamberlain's alertness and detachment of mind the way he had dropped his advocacy of the Gothenburg system, simply because the Temperance people would not be satisfied with it. Chamberlain had genuine hostility to the Establishment and was sincerely against a second Chamber, but personal factors might modify his actions on both questions. Morley doubted his voting for Welsh Disestablishment, but Rendel thought he would do so and cut it up as a means of spoliation in committee. He believed that Chamberlain would run Hartington for premier and accept the leadership of Balfour in the Commons, but would not himself accept the Irish Secretaryship, as there was nothing to be done in that quarter by the Tories, as the fire of agitation was burnt out and the time had not yet come for serious administrative reforms. Morley agreed that 12,000 Irish Constabulary would be sufficient to cope with an agrarian rising, as the Irish would not go beyond moonlighting, cattle mutilation and agrarian assassination. The Parnellite schism and want of money completed the Irish collapse. Coercion could be restored, as it no longer revolted the English voter. Morley recounted the story of a dinner he had had with Chamberlain in Aug. 1887, when Chamberlain argued that the failure of the Round Table Conference had been due to differences not of substance but of personal interest, and had induced Morley to take to Gladstone a plan for reunion, the nature of which he declined to communicate, as he wished to keep it to himself to ensure having the credit for it. This plan was not regarded with much favour by Gladstone on the ground that the suggestion had come too late and too soon. Thus it proved that so late as Aug. 1887 Chamberlain was a Home Ruler, prepared to take a leading part in carrying it out, subject to getting his own terms in the way of credit, the default of which condition was probably the sole cause of the original defection. Rendel considered that Morley was unhappy about his own personal position and a little sore with Gladstone, who had appointed Charles Bowen instead of him as a trustee of the British Museum. But he also found the burden of the Irish post, which he had wished to give up on Gladstone's retirement, too heavy. He had accepted only on Rosebery's assurance that the Government could not possibly stand unless Morley stuck to Ireland which, in Morley's view, would have proved true, instancing Rosebery's blunder over the 'predominant partner' speech which, but for Morley, would have cost him the Irish vote. Morley would have liked to have been released when H. Fowler went to the India Office. He found that the salary of £4,300, encumbered with the expenses of the office, left him with only £1,800 a year net, as compared with the net £5,000 of a Secretary of State. But he complained mostly of the severity of the work, which had greatly impaired his health. He had declined the offer of the Presidentship of the Council made in order to increase his status. Rendel thought too that his supersession by Asquith preyed

	upon his spirit. Rendel goes on to quote Morley's views on the Prince of Wales and the Queen, who had got on best with Cross in the last ministry and with Fowler in the present. John Morley related the story of his disagreement with Gladstone about his article in the Pall Mall Gazette, condemning Gladstone's appointment of his nephew, Littleton, as a Commissioner of Woods and Forests. Morley claimed that he had upheld throughout his objection to nepotism, had refused to appoint his own nephew to a place in Ireland and had dissuaded the present Irish Chancellor from giving an appointment to his brother-in-law. Mention also of Gladstone's strictures on gambling. Morley was of the opinion that Gibson, Lord Ashbourne, had in a manner made Lord Salisbury's first ministry. Lord Randolph Churchill, on Gibson's authority, told Salisbury about April 1885 that Ireland could be governed without coercion, a view which was disputed by Lord Waterford, Morley's informant. This resulted in a change of policy. Hicks Beach's attack on Spencer's coercion administration in the Maamtrasna debate and Salisbury's Newport speech, which minimised boycotting and suggested the relations of Austria and Hungary as a solution of the Irish question. Gibson and Lord Randolph Churchill were both rewarded with posts in the first Salisbury Government, Sir Robert Hamilton, who then believed that the only solution was Home Rule, was kept in Ireland and Lord Carnarvon was sent to negotiate with Parnell. When Gladstone reached an understanding with Parnell a complete volte face took place on the part of Salisbury. When the Liberals were defeated at the next general election and a Government was formed with obvious dependence on the Anti-Home Rule Liberals, Sir Robert Hamilton was dismissed and Balfour resumed coercion. Lord R. Churchill's quarrel with Gibson originated in the belief that the latter owed his election to Lord Randolph's introduction of his views to Salisbury but Gibson could reasonably take the view that Lord Randolph's promotion was due to his own conversion of Lord Salisbury. Morley believed that Gibson, who hated the English Tories, held his place simply by hard fighting for it. He was a bad specimen of a bad lot, the Irish Lawyer, and Peter O'Brien, who was running Gibson for the Chancellorship in the next ministry, was no better. Morley spoke with respect and liking for both Lord Waterford and the Duke of Abercorn. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 681. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Cogordan [the French official in charge of negotiations with China] about the rumour of Hart's appointment as minister in Peking, which had appeared in some newspaper, the which he had denied all knowledge; he blames the report on the unfortunate telegram of Lady Hart to her husband, asking him to telegraph acceptance of the post; Cogordan believed that if the rumour were true, it might hinder the negotiations; he hopes that Hart might complete the peace negotiations before taking up his appointment; the French had given assurances that the reinforcements sent to China were merely to enforce order and peace and to occupy places evacuated by China, which reinforcements were continued in deference to public misgivings on the armistice; the French Government would scrupulously carry out the terms of the protocol; Formosa would be evacuated as soon as peace was signed, and the Pescadores as soon as possible. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1939. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1885, April 28.

Urges that, if loans were taken from outside powers, the Chinese Government should not undertake to be bound by restrictive stipulations; instances the case of a report in the newspapers that a German syndicate had arrived in China prepared to lend £35,000,000, even without interest, in return for the grant of exclusive rights to construct railways and other public works in China; but the safest course was to avoid promising more than the interest; other powers would be bound to oppose such a monopoly, but even if they did not challenge it the ultimate expenditure for the works would include both the interest and the capital, the cost of plant and labour, the profits of lenders and contractors and the losses borrowers must necessarily put up with after binding themselves to an uncertain future; borrowing money in this way would deprive China of all initiative and liberty of action and would entail a certainly excessive expenditure for a not certainly adequate performance of work; in undertaking public works specialists and men of ability must be employed and only first class financial houses should be dealt with; the period of the loan should not be too short and repayment should not commence too soon; interests charged by banks in Shanghai or Hong Kong would be high, but if China borrowed abroad, through capitalists more especially connected with loans, the interest would still be high; but if an Establishment like the Bank of England would consent to raise a loan for China, without employing its own money, nor involving the British Government, the interest payable would probably be 5%, as compared with 7% in Shanghai and Hong Kong and 6% from a London house; it is pointed out that nine-tenths of the money spent on guns during the last 20 years had been purchased from hawkers, were costly and useless, with the additional disadvantage of being of many and mixed patterns; suggests that the provinces be prohibited from patronising hawkers and should be compelled to purchase their arms through one Yamen, which

	could deal direct with the best manufacturers at the lowest prices; in the case of railways a competent specialist should first of all survey and determine the line to follow, the costs should be estimated and the work given to a competent contractor or, preferably in the case of China, tenders invited, in which case difficulties connected with monopolies or springing from international jealousies were not so likely to arise and the best work at the fairest cost would result; but loans and works would never be as they might be as long as China was without a national bank and a proper coinage. Nodyn   Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: 1964. Lleoliad ffisegol   Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Trefniant | Arrangement:

In order to avoid confusion with previous groups, it was decided (in 1986) to divide the papers listed here into 17 classes, designated A-H, J-N, P, R-T. The papers in Classes A to K relate to a number of members of the Rendel and Goodhart families; those in Classes L to T concern Sir George William Rendel (1889-1979), diplomat and public servant, and father of Miss Rosemary Rendel. Papers of Rosemary Rendel were designated Class V. When the cataloguing of the papers had been completed in June 1986, a further group of papers was deposited, these included five letters Lewis Rendel, now designated Class U. Later deposits included miscellaneous material, designated Class X.
