

- ff. 1-3 Outline arguments on the nature of bodies and matter:
An corpus naturale sit subiectum physicæ scientiæ ... Per accidens, et secundario sit corruptionem intendit.
- ff. 3^v-42^v Notes and outline arguments drawn from Johannes Magirus, Physiologiae Peripateticæ libri sex (1618):
An subiectum physicæ sit corpus naturale ... Sensus communis quatenus species oblatas cognoscit et indicat.
- ff. 43^v-48 Accounts.
- Rough accounts and calculations, together with a note in English of the sale of unspecified land in 1622, all in a later hand; see also f. ii^v for further rough accounts, in a different hand of s.xvii.
- ff. 49-75^v Notes and outline arguments from [?William] Martin, `Metaphys[icæ] exercit[atationes]':
An metaphysica sit sapientia ... Ratione formæ quæ certum et definitum subiectum requirit.
